This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.
It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.
Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

PREFATORY NOTE.

No apology is needed for a new edition of the Confessio Amantis, which has long been among the desiderata of the Early English Text Society. The work of the present editor dates from the discovery, made some six years ago, that the best authorities for the text were to be found in the Bodleian Library, and consequently that the main part of the work ought to be done at Oxford. At the same time all due attention has been paid to the manuscripts which arc to be found elsewhere, and thanks are due to many Librarians and private owners for the help which they have given.

It may be added here that the editor has become more and more convinced, as his work went on, of the value and authentic character of the text given by the Fairfax MS. of the Confessio Amantis, which as proceeding directly from the author, though not written by his hand, may claim the highest rank as an authority for his language.

It is hoped that the list of errata, the result chiefly of a revision made during the formation of the Glossary, may be taken to indicate not so much the carelessness of the editor, as his desire to be absolutely accurate in the reproduction of this interesting text.

The analysis of the Confessio Amantis which is printed in the Introduction, was undertaken chiefly at the suggestion of Dr. Furnivall. With reference to this it may be observed that in places where the author is following wellknown sources, the summaries are intentionally bricfer, and in the case of some of the Biblical stories a reference to the original has been thought sufficient.

INTRODUCTION

The Confessio Amantis has been the subject both of exaggerated praise and of undue depreciation. It was the fashion of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries to set Gower side by side with Chaucer, and to represent them as the twin stars of the new English poetry, a view which, however it may be justified by consideration of their language and literary tendencies, seems to imply a very uncritical estimate of their comparative importance. Some of these references are collected below, and they serve to indicate in a general way that the author had a great literary reputation and that his book was very popular, the latter being a conclusion which is sufficiently vouched for also by the large number of manuscripts which existed, and by the three printed editions. We shall confine ourselves here to drawing attention to a few facts of special significance.

In the first place the Confessio Amantis is the earliest English book which made its way beyond the limits of its own language. There exists a Spanish translation, dating apparently from the very beginning of the fifteenth century, in which reference is made also to a Portuguese version, not known to be now in existence, on which perhaps the Castilian was based. This double translation into contemporary languages of the Continent must denote that the writer's fame was not merely insular in his life-time.

Secondly, with regard to the position of this book in the sixteenth century, the expressions used by Berthelette seem to me to imply something more than a mere formal tribute. This printer, who is especially distinguished by his interest in language, in the preface to his edition of the Confessio Amantis most warmly sets forth his author as a model of pure English, contrasting his native simplicity with the extravagant affectations of style and language which were then in fashion. In fact, when we compare the style of Gower in writing of love with that which we find in some of the books which were at that time issuing from the press, we cannot help feeling that the recommendation was justified.

Again, nearly a century later a somewhat striking testimony to the position of Gower as a standard author is afforded by Ben Jonson's English Grammar. The syntax contains about a hundred and thirty illustrative quotations, and of these about thirty are from Gower. Chaucer is cited twenty-five times, Lydgate and Sir Thomas More each about fourteen, the other chief authorities being Norton, Jewel, Fox, Sir John Cheke and the English Bible.

Finally, our author's popularity and established position as a story-teller is decisively vouched for by the partly Shakesperian play of Pericles. Plots of plays were usually borrowed without acknowledgement ; but here, a plot being taken from the Confessio Amantis, the opportunity is seized of bringing Gower himself on the stage to act as Prologue to four out of the five acts, speaking in the measure of his own octosyllabic couplet, > ' To sing a song that old was sung From ashes ancient Gower is come,' &c.

The book was so well known and the author so well established in reputation, that a play evidently gained credit by connecting itself with his name.

The following are the principal references to Gower in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The author of The King's Quair dedicates his poem to the memory (or rather to the poems) of his masters Gower and Chaucer. Hoccleve calls him ' my maister Gower,' ' Whos vertu I am insufficient
For to descrive.'
John Walton of Osney, the metrical translator of Boethius, writes, [^0]of English literature. Caxton printed the Confossio Amantis in 1483, and it seems to have been one of the most popular productions of his press.

In the sixteenth century Gower appears by the side of Chaucer in Dunbar's Lament for the Makaris and in Lindsay's poems. Hawes in the Pastime of Pleasure classes him with Chaucer and his beloved Lydgate, and Skelton introduces him as first in order of time among the English poets who are mentioned in the Garland of Laurel,
'I saw Gower that first garnysshed our Englysshe rude, And maister Chaucer,' &c., a testimony which is not quite consistent with that in the Lament for Philip Sparose,
'Gower's Englysh is old
And of no value is told,
His mater is worth gold
And worthy to be enrold.'
Barclay in the Preface of his Mirour of Good Manners (printed 1516) states that he has been desired by his ' Master,' Sir Giles Alington, to abridge and amend the Confessio Amantis, but has declined the task, chiefly on moral grounds. The work he says would not be suitable to his age and order (he was a priest and monk of Ely),

> - And though many passages therin be commendable,
> Some processes appeare replete with wantonnes:

For age it is a folly and jeopardie doubtlesse, And able for to rayse bad name contagious, To write, reade or commen of thing venerious.'
Leland had some glimmering perception of the difference between Chaucer and Gower in literary merit ; but Bale suggests that our author was 'alter Dantes ac Petrarcha' (no less), adding the remark, taken perhaps from Berthelette's preface, 'sui-temporis lucerna habebatur ad docte scribendum in lingua vulgari ${ }^{1}$ '. In Bullein's Dialogue against the Fever Pestilence (1564) Gower is represented as sitting next to the Classical poets, Homer, Hesiod, Ennius and Lucan. Puttenham in the Art of English Poosie (1589), and Sidney in the Defence of Poesic (1595), equally class Gower and Chaucer together. The latter, illustrating his thesis that the first writers of each country were the poets, says, 'So among the Romans were Livius Andronicus and Ennius, so in the Italian language . . . the poets Dante, Boccace and Petrarch, so in our English, Gower and Chaucer, after whom, encouraged and delighted with their excellent foregoing, others have followed to beautify our mother tongue, as well in the same kind as in other arts.'

In Robert Greene's Vision, printed about 1592, Chaucer and Gower appear as the accepted representatives of the pleasant and the sententious styles in story-telling, and compete with one another in tales upon a given subject, the cure of jealousy. The introduction of Gower into the play of Pericles, Prince of Tyre has already been referred to.

The uncritical exaggeration of Gower's literary merits, which formerly prevailed, has been of some disadvantage to him in [^1]modern times. The comparison with Chaucer, which was so repeatedly suggested, could not but be unfavourable to him ; and modern critics, instead of endeavouring to appreciate fairly such merits as he has, have often felt called upon to offer him up as a sacrifice to the honour of Chaucer, who assuredly needs no such addition to his glory. The true critical procedure is rather the opposite of this. Gower's early popularity and reputation arefacts to be reckoned with, in addition to the literary merit which we in our generation may find in his work, and neither students of Middle English, nor those who aim at tracing the influences under which the English language and literature developed during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, can afford to leave Gower's English work out of their account.

THE ENGLISH WORKS.

i. Literary Characteristics.-The reason of the success of the Confessio Amantis was naturally the fact that it supplied a popular need. After endeavouring to 'give an account of his stewardship' in various ways as a moralist, the author at length found his true vocation, and this time happily in his native tongue, as a teller of stories. The rest is all machinery, sometimes poetical and interesting, sometimes tiresome and clumsy, but the stories are the. main thing. The perception of the popular taste may have come to him partly through the success of Chaucer in the Legend of Good Women, and the simple, but excellent narrative style which he thereupon developed must have been a new revelation of his powers to himself as well as to others. It is true that he does not altogether drop the character of the moralist, but he has definitely and publicly resigned the task of setting society generally to rights,

' It stant noght in my sufficance
    So grete thinges to compasse,
    Forthi the Stile of my writinges
    Fro this day forth 1 thenke change
    And speke of thing is noght so strange,' &c. (i. 4 fi.)

He covers his retreat indeed by dwelling upon the all-pervading influence of Love in the world and the fact that all the evils of society may be said to spring from the want of it ; but this is little more than a pretext. Love is the themę partly because it supplies a convenient framework for the design, and partly perhaps out of deference to a royal command. There is no reason to doubt the statement in the first version of the Prologue about the meeting of the author with Richard II on the river, and that he then received suggestions for a book, which the king promised to accept and read. It may easily be supposed that Richard himself suggested love as the subject, being a matter in which, as we know from Froissart, he was apt to take delight. 'Adont me demanda le roy de quoy il traittoit. Je luy dis, "D'amours." De ceste response fut-il tous resjouys, et regarda dedens le livre en plusieurs lieux et y lisy '.' It was certainly to the credit of the young king that he should have discerned literary merit in the work of the grave monitor who had so lectured him upon his duties in the Vox Clamantis, and should have had some part in encouraging him to set his hand to a more promising task; and if it be the fact that he suggested love as the subject, we cannot but admire both the sense of humour displayed by the prince and the address with which our author acquitted himself of the task proposed.

The idea of the Confession was no doubt taken from the Roman de la Rose, where the priest of Nature, whose name is Genius, hears her confession; but it must be allowed that Gower has made much better use of it. Nature occupies herself in expounding the system of the universe generally, and in confessing at great length not her own faults but those of Man, whom she repents of having made. Her tone is not at all that of a penitent, though she may be on her knees, and Genius does little or nothing for her in reply except to agree rather elaborately with her view that, if proper precautions had been taken, Mars and Venus might easily have outwitted Vulcan. Gower on the other hand has made the Confession into a framework which will conveniently hold any number of stories upon every possible subject, and at the same time he has preserved for the most part the due propriety of character and situation in the two actors. By giving the scheme an apparent limitation to the subject of love he has not in fact necessarily limited the range of narrative, for there is no impropriety in illustrating by a tale the general nature of a vice or virtue before making the special application to cases which concern lovers, and this special application, made with all due solemnity, has often a character of piquancy in which the moral tale

[^2]pure and simple would be wanting. Add to this that the form adopted tends itself to a kind of quasi-religious treatment of the subject, which was fully in accordance with the taste of the day, and produces much of that impression of quaintness and charm with which we most of us associate our first acquaintance with the Confessio Amantis.

The success of the work-for a success it is in spite of its faults -is due to several merits. The first of these is the author's un- / questionable talent for story-telling. He has little of the dramatic power or the humour which distinguish Chaucer, but he tells his tales in a well-ordered and interesting manner, does not break the thread by digressions, never tires of the story before it is finished, as Chaucer does so obviously and so often, and carries his reader through with him successfully to the end in almost every case. His narrative is a clear, if shallow, stream, rippling pleasantly over the stones and unbroken either by dams or cataracts. The materials of course are not original, but Gower is by no means a slavish follower in detail of his authorities; the proportions and arrangement of the stories are usually his own and often show good judgement. Moreover he not seldom gives a fresh turn to a well-known story, as in the instances of Jephthah and Saul, or makes a pretty addition to it , as is the case in some of the tales from Ovid. Almost the only story in which the interest really flags is the longest, the tale of Apollonius of Tyre, which fills up so much of the eighth book and was taken as the basis of the plot of Pericles ; and this was in its original form so loose and rambling a series of incidents, that hardly any skill could have completely redeemed it. There is no doubt that this gift of clear and interesting narrative was the merit which most appealed to the popular taste, the wholesome appetite for stories being at that time not too well catered for, and that the plainness of the style was an advantage rather than a drawback.

Tastes will differ of course as to the merits of the particular stories, but some may be selected as incontestably good. The tale of Mundus and Paulina in the first book is excellently told, and so is that of Alboin and Rosemund. The best of the second book are perhaps the False Bachelor and the legend of Constantine and Silvester, in the latter of which the author has greatly improved upon his materials. In the third book the tale of Canace is most pathetically rendered, far better than in Ovid, so that in spite of Chaucer's denunciation his devoted follower Lydgate could not resist the temptation of borrowing it. The fourth book, which altogether is of special excelfence, gives us Rosiphelee, Phyllis, and the very poetically told tale of Ceix and Alceone. The fifth has Jason and Medea, a most admirable example of sustained narrative, simple and yet effective and poetical, perhaps on the whole Gower's best performance : also the oriental tale of Adrian and Bardus, and the well told story of Tereus and Philomela. In the seventh we shall find the Biblical story of Gideon excellently rendered, the Rape of Lucrece, and the tale of Virginia. These may be taken as specimens of Gower's narrative power at its best, and by the degree of effectiveness which he attains in them and the manner in which he has used his materials, he may fairly be judged as a story-teller.

As regards style and poetical qualities we find much that is good in the narratives. Force and picturesqueness certainly cannot be denied to the tale of Medea, with its description of the summer sea glistening in the sun, which blazes down upon the returning hero, and from the golden fleece by his side flashes a signal of success to Medea in her watch-tower, as she prays for her chosen knight. Still less can we refuse to recognize the poetical power of the later phases of the same story, first the midnight rovings of Medea in search of enchantments,

> 'The world was stille on every side; With open hed and fot al bare, Hir her tosprad sche gan to fare, Upon hir clothes gert sche was, Al specheles and on the gras Sche glod forth as an Addre doth: Non otherwise sche ne goth, Til sche cam to the freisshe flod, And there a while sche withstod. Thries sche torned hire atoute, And thries ek sche gan doun loute And in the flod sche wette hir her, And thries on the water ther Sche gaspeth with a drecchinge onde, And tho sche tok hir speche on honde.' (v. 3962 f.), and again later, when the charms are set in action, 4059 ff ., a passage of extraordinary picturesqueness, but too long to be quoted here. We do not forget the debt to Ovid, but these descriptions are far more detailed and forcible than the original.

For a picture of a different kind, also based upon Ovid, we may take the description of the tears of Lucrece for her husband, and the reviving beauty in her face when he appears,
> ' With that the water in hire yhe Aros, that sche ne myhte it stoppe, And as men sen the dew bedroppe The leves and the floures eke, Riht so upon hire whyte cheke The wofull salte teres felle. Whan Collatin hath herd hire telle The menynge of hire trewe herte, Anon with that to hire he sterte, And seide, "Lo, mi goode diere, Nou is he come to you hiere, That ye most loven, as ye sein." And sche with goodly chiere ayein Beclipte him in hire armes smale, And the colour, which erst was pale, To Beaute thanne was restored, So that it myhte noght be mored ' (vii. 4830 ff.), a passage in which Gower, with his natural taste for simplicity, has again improved upon his classical authority, and may safely challenge comparison with Chaucer, who has followed Ovid more literally.

It is worth mention that Gower's descriptions of storms at sea are especially vivid and true, so that we are led to suppose that he had had more than a mere literary acquaintance with such things. Such for instance is the account of the shipwreck of the Greek fleet, iii. 981 ff., and of the tempests of which Apollonius is more than once the victim, as viii. 604 ff , and in general nautical terms and metaphors, of some of which the meaning is not quite clear, seem to come readily from his pen.

Next to the simple directness of narrative style which distinguishes the stories themselves, we must acknowledge a certain attractiveness in the setting of them. The Lover decidedly engages our interest: we can understand his sorrows and his joys, his depression when his mistress will not listen to the verses which he has written for her, and his delight when he hears men speak her praises. We can excuse his frankly confessed envy, malice and hatred in all matters which concern his rivals in her love. His feelings are described in a very natural manner, the besitation and forgetfulness in her presence, and the self-reproach afterwards, the eagerness to do her small services, to accompany her to mass, to lift her into her saddle, to ride by her carriage, the delight of being present in her chamber, of singing to her or reading her the tale of Troilus, or if no better may be, of watching her long and slender fingers at work on her weaving or embroidery. Sometimes she will not stay with him, and then he plays with the dog or with the birds in the cage, and converses with the page of her chamber-anything as an excuse to stay; and when it grows late and he must perforce depart, he goes indeed, but returns with the pretence of having forgotten something, in order that he may bid her good-night once more. He rises in the night and looks out of his window over the houses towards the chamber where she sleeps, and loses himself in imagination of the love-thefts which he would commit if by any necromancy he had the power. Yet he is not extravagantly romantic: he will go wherever his lady bids him, but he will not range the world in arms merely in order to gain renown, losing his lady perhaps in the meantime at home. We take his side when he complains of the Confessor's want of feeling for a pain which he does not himself experience, and his readiness to prescribe for a wound of the heart as if it were a sore of the heel. Even while we smile, we compassionate the lover who is at last disqualified on account of age, and recommended to make a 'beau retret' while there is yet time.

But there is also another character in whom we are interested, and that is the lady herself. Gower certainly appreciated something of the delicacy and poetical refinement which ideal love requires, and this appreciation he shows also in his Balades; but here we have something more than this. The figure of the lady, which we see constantly in the background of the dialogue, is both attractive and human. We recognize in her a creature of flesh and blood, no goddess indeed, as her lover himself observes, but a charming embodiment of womanly grace and refinement. She is surrounded by lovers, but she is wise and wary. She is courteous and gentle, but at the same time firm : she will not gladly swear, and therefore says nay without an oath, but it is a decisive nay to any who are disposed to presume. She does not neglect her household duties merely because a lover insists upon hanging about her, but leaves him to amuse himself how he may, while she busies herself elsewhere. If she has leisure and can sit down to her embroidery, he may read to her if he will, but it must be some sound romance, and not his own rondels, balades, and virelays in praise of her. Custom allows him to kiss her when he takes his leave, but if he comes back on any pretext and takes his leave again, there is not often a second kiss permitted. She lets him lead her up to the offering in church, and ride by her side when she drives out, but she will take no presents from him, though with some of her younger admirers, whose passion she knows is a less serious matter, she is not so strict, but takes and gives freely. Even the description of her person is not offensive, as such descriptions almost always are. Her lover suspects that her soul may be in a perilous state, seeing that she has the power of saving a man's life and yet suffers him to die, but he admits there is no more violence in her than in a child of three years old, and her words are as pleasant to him as the winds of the South. Usurious dealing is a vice of which he ventures to accuse her, seeing that he has given her his whole heart in return for a single glance of her eye, and she holds to the bargain and will not give heart for heart ; but then, as the Confessor very justly replies, 'she may be such that her one glance is worth thy whole heart many times over,' and so he has sold his heart profitably, having in return much more than it is worth.

However, the literary characteristic which is perhaps most remarkable in the Confessio Amantis is connected rather with the form of expression than with the subject-matter. No justice is done to Gower unless it is acknowledged that the technical skill which he displays in his verse and the command which he has over the language for his own purposes is very remarkable. In the ease and naturalness of his movement within the fetters of the octosyllabic couplet he far surpasses his contemporaries, including Chaucer himself. Certain inversions of order and irregularities of construction he allows himself, and there are many stop-gaps of the conventional kind in the ordinary flow of his narrative; but in places where the matter requires it, his admirable management of the verse paragraph, the metrical smoothness of his lines, attained without unnatural accent or forced order of words, and the neatness with which he expresses exactly what he has to say within the precise limits which he lays down for himself, show a finished mastery of expression which is surprising in that age of half-developed English style, and in a man who had trained himself rather in French and Latin than in English composition. Such a sentence as the following, for example, seems to flow from him with perfect ease, there is no halting in the metre, no hesitation or inversion for the sake of the rhyme, it expresses just what it has to express, no more and no less:

> 'Til that the hihe king of kinges, Which seth and knoweth alle thinges, Whos yhe mai nothing asterte,The privetes of mannes herte Thei speke and sounen in his Ere As thogh thei lowde wyndes were,He tok vengance upon this pride.' (i. 2803 fi.)

Or again, as an example of a more colloquial kind,

> 'And if thei techen to restreigae Mi love, it were an ydel peine To lerne a thing which mai noght be. For lich unto the greene tree, If that men toke his rote aweie, Riht so myn herte scholde deie, If that mi love be withdrawe.' (iv. 2677 ff.)

There is nothing remarkable about the sentiment or expression in these passages, but they are perfectly simple and natural, and run into rhyming verse without disturbance of sense or accent; but such technical skill as we have here is extremely rare among the writers of the time. Chaucer had wider aims, and being an artist of an altogether superior kind, he attains, when at his best, to a higher level of achievement in versification as in other things; but he is continually attempting more than he can perform, he often aims at the million and misses the unit. His command over his materials is evidently incomplete, and he has not troubled himself to acquire perfection of craftsmanship, knowing that other things are more important,

> 'And that I do no didigence
> To shewe craft but o sentence.'

The result is that the most experienced reader often hesitates in his metre and is obliged to read lines over twice or even thrice, before he can satisfy himself how the poet meant his words to be accented and what exactly was the rhythm he intended. In fact, instead of smoothing the way for his reader, he often deliberately chooses to spare himself labour by taking every advantage, fair or unfair, of those licences of accent and syllable suppression for which the unstable condition of the literary language afforded scope. The reader of Gower's verse is never interrupted in this manner except by the fault of a copyist or an editor; and when we come to examine the means by which the smoothness is attained, we feel that we have to do with a literary craftsman who by laborious training has acquired an almost perfect mastery over his tools. The qualities of which we are speaking are especially visible in the more formal style of utterance which belongs to the speeches, letters and epitaphs in our author's tales. The reply of Constance to her questioner (ii. 1148 ff ) is a good example of the first:

> 'Quod sche, "I am A womman wofully bestad. I hadde a lord, and thus he bad, That I forth with my litel Sone Upon the wawes scholden wone, Bot what the cause was, I not: Bot he which alle thinges wot Yit hath, I thonke him, of his miht Mi child and me so kept upriht, That we be save bothe tuo.".

And as longer instances we may point to the reflexions of the Emperor Constantine near the end of the same book (ii. 3243 ff.), and the prayer of Cephalus (iv. 3197-3252). The letters of Canace and of Penelope are excellent, each in its own way, and the epitaphs of Iphis (iv. 3674 f.) and of Thaise (viii. 1533 f.) are both good examples of the simple yet finished style, e.g.
> ' Hier lith, which slowh himself, Iphis, For love of Araxarathen : And in ensample of tho wommen, That soffren men to deie so, Hire forme a man mai sen also, Hou it is torned fleissh and bon Into the figure of a Ston : He was to neysshe and sche to hard. Be war forthi hicrafterward; Ye men and wommen bothe tuo, Ensampleth you of that was tho.' (iv. 3674 f.)

very far short of the highest standard, but such as his ideals are, he is able very completely to realize them. The French and English elements of the language, instead of still maintaining 2 wilful strife, as is so often the case in Chaucer's metre, are here combined in harmonious alliance. More especially we must recognize the fact that in Gower's English verse we have a consistent and for the moment a successful attempt to combine the French syllabic with the English accentual system of metre, and this without sacrificing the purity of the language as regards forms of words and grammatical inflexion. We shall see in our subsequent investigations how careful and ingenious he is in providing by means of elision and otherwise for the legitimate suppression of those weak terminations which could not find a place as syllables in the verse without disturbing its accentual flow, while at the same time the sense of their existence was not to be allowed to disappear. The system was too difficult and complicated to be possible except for a specially trained hand, and Gower found no successor in his enterprise; but the fact that the attempt was made is at least worthy of note.
With considerable merits both of plan and execution the Confessio Amantis has also no doubt most serious faults. The scheme itself, with its conception of a Confessor who as priest has to expound a system of morality, while as a devotee of Venus he is concerned only with the affairs of love (i. 237-280), can hardly be called altogether a consistent or happy one. The application of morality to matters of love and of love to questions of morality is often very forced, though it may sometimes be amusing in its gravity. The Confessor is continually forgetting one or the other of his two characters, and the moralist is found justifying unlawful love or the servant of Venus singing the praises of virginity. Moreover the author did not resist the temptation to express his views on society in a Prologue which is by no means sufficiently connected with the general scheme of the poem, though it is in part a protest against division and discord, that is to say, lack of love. Still worse is the deliberate departure from the general plan which we find in the seventh book, where on pretence of affording relief and recreation to the wearied penitent, the Confessor, who says that he has little or no understanding except of love, is allowed to make a digression which embraces the whole field of human knowledge, but more especially deals with the duties of a king, a second political pamphlet in fact, in which the stories of kings ruined by lust or insolence, of Sardanapalus, Rehoboam, Tarquin, and the rest, are certainly intended to some extent as an admonition of the author's royal patron. The petition addressed to Rehoboam by his people against excessive taxation reads exactly like one of the English parliamentary protests of the period against the extravagant demands of the crown. Again, the fifth book, which even without this would be disproportionately long, contains an absolutely unnecessary account of the various religions of the world, standing there apparently for no reason except to show the author's learning, and reaching the highest pitch of grotesque absurdity when the Confessor occupies himself in demolishing the claim of Venus to be accounted a goddess, and that too without even the excuse of having forgotten for the moment that he is supposed to be her priest. Minor excrescences of the same kind are to be found in the third book, where the lawfulness of war is discussed, and in the fourth, where there is a dissertation on the rise of the Arts, and especially of Alchemy. All that can be said is that these digressions were very common in the books of the age-the Roman de la Rose, at least in the part written by Jean de Meun, is one of the worst offenders.

Faults of detail it would be easy enough to point out. The style is at times prosaic and the matter uninteresting, the verse is often eked out with such commonplace expressions and helps to rhyme as were used by the writers of the time, both French or English. Sometimes the sentences are unduly spun out or the words and clauses are awkwardly transposed for the sake of the uninterrupted smoothness of the verse. The attainment of this object moreover is not always an advantage, and sometimes the regularity of the metre and the inevitable recurrence of the rhyme produces a tiresome result. On the whole however the effect is not unpleasing, 'the ease and regularity with which the verse flows breathes a peaceful contentment, which communicates itself to the reader, and produces the same effect upon the ear as the monotonous but not wearisome splashing of a fountain '! Moreover, as has already been pointed out, when the writer is at his best, the rhyme is kept duly in the background, and the paragraph is constructed quite independently of the couplet, so that this

[^3]form of metre proves often to be a far better vehicle for the narrative than might have been at first supposed.
ii. Date and Circumstances.-The Confessio Amantis in its earliest form bears upon the face of it the date 1390 (Prol. 33 I margin)', and we have no reason to doubt that this was the year in which it was first completed. The author tells us that it was written at the command of King Richard II, whom he met while rowing on the Thames at London, and who invited him to come into his barge to speak with him. It is noticeable, however, that even this first edition has a dedication to Henry earl of Derby, contained in the Latin lines at the end of the poem ${ }^{2}$, so that it is not quite accurate to say that the dedication was afterwards changed, but rather that this dedication was made more prominent and introduced into the text of the poem, while at the same time the personal reference to the king in the Prologue was suppressed. If the date referred to above had been observed by former editors, the speculations first of Pauli and then of Professor Hales, tending to throw back the completion of the first recension of the Confessio Amantis to the year 1386, or even 1383, would have been spared. Their conclusions rest, moreover, on the purest guess-work. The former argues that the preface and the epilogue ${ }^{3}$ in their first form date from the year 1386 , because from that year the king (who was then nineteen years old) 'developed those dangerous qualities which estranged from him, amongst others, the poet '; and Professor Hales (Athenceum, Dec. 1881) contends that the references to the young king's qualities as a ruler, 'Justice medled with pite,' &c. certainly point to the years immediately succeeding the Peasants' revolt (a time when Gower did not regard him as a responsible ruler at all, but excuses him for the evil proceedings of the government on account of his tender age) , [^4]that the reference to Richard's desire to establish peace (viii. $3014^{}$ f.) must belong to the period of the negotiations with the French and the subsequent truce, $1383-84$, though Professor Hales is himself quite aware that negotiations for peace were proceeding also in 1389 , and finally that the mention of 'the newe guise of Beawme' must indicate the very year succeeding the king's marriage to Anne of Bohemia in 1382, whereas in fact the Bohemian fashions would no doubt continue to prevail at court, and still be accounted new, throughout the queen's lifetime. It is on such grounds as these that we are told that the Confessio Amantis in its first form cannot have been written later than the year 1385 and was probably as early as 1383 .

All such conjectures are destroyed by the fact that the manuscripts of the first recension bear the date 1390 at the place cited, and though this does not absolutely exclude a later date for the completion of the book, it is decisive against an earlier one. Moreover, the fact that in the final recension this date is omitted (and deliberately omitted, as we know from the erasure in the Fairfax MS.) points to the conclusion that it is to be regarded definitely as a date of publication, and therefore was inappropriate for a later edition.

This conclusion agrees entirely with the other indications, and they are sufficiently precise, though the fact that one of these also has unluckily escaped the notice of the editors has caused it to be generally overlooked '.

The form of epilogue which was substituted for that of the first recension, and in which the over-sanguine praise of Richard as a ruler is cancelled, bears in the margin the date of the fourteenth year of his reign (viii. 2973 margin), 'Hic' in anno quarto decimo Regis Ricardi orat pro statu regni,' &c. Now the fourteenth year of King Richard II was from June 21, 1390, to the same day of 1391. We must therefore suppose that the change in this part of the book took place, in some copies at least, within a few months of its first completion.

Thirdly, we have an equally precise date for the alteration in the Prologue, by which all except a formal mention of Richard II is [^5]excluded, while the dedication to Henry of Lancaster is introduced into the text of the poem; and here the time indicated is the sixteenth year of King Richard (Prol. 25), a date which appears also in the margin of some copies here and at 1.97 , so that we may assume that this final change of form took place in the year 1392-93, that is, not later than June 1393 .

Having thus every step dated for us by the author, we may, if we think it worth while, proceed to conjecture what were the political events which suggested his action; but in such a case as this it is evidently preposterous to argue first from the political conditions, of which as they personally affected our author and his friends we can only be very imperfectly informed, and then to endeavour to force the given dates into accordance with our own conclusions ${ }^{1}$.

It will be observed from the above dates that we are led to infer two stages of alteration, and the expectation is raised of finding the poem in some copies with the epilogue rewritten but the preface left in its original state. This expectation is fulfilled. The Bodley MS. 294 gives a text of this kind, and it is certain that there were others of the same form, for Berthelette used for his edition a manuscript of this kind, which was not identical with that which we have.

In discussing the import of the various changes introduced by the author it is of some importance to bear in mind the fact already mentioned that even the first issue of the Confessio Amantis had a kind of dedication to Henry of Lancaster in the I atin lines with which it concluded,

> 'Derbeie comiti, recolunt quem laude periti, Vade liber purus sub eo requicsce futurus.'

This seems rather to dispose of the idea that a dedication to Henry would be inconsistent with loyalty to Richard, a suggestion which would hardly have been made in the year 1390, or even 1393.

[^6]No doubt those copies which contained in the preface the statement that the book was written at the command of the king and for his sake, and in the epilogue the presentation of the completed book to him ( $3050^{*} \mathrm{ff}$ ), if they had also appended to them the Latin lines which commend the work to the earl of Derby, may be said to have contained in a certain sense a double dedication, the compliment being divided between the king and his brilliant cousin, and very probably a copy which was intended for the court would be without the concluding lines, as we find to be the case with some manuscripts; but the suggestion that the expressions of loyalty and the praises of Richard as a ruler which we find in the first epilogue are properly to be called inconsistent with a dedication of the poem to Henry of Lancaster, his cousin and counsellor, is plausible only in the light of later events, which could not be foreseen by the poet, in the course of which Henry became definitely the opponent of Richard and finally took the lead in deposing him. It is true that the earl of Derby had been one of the lords appellant in 1387 , but after the king's favourites had been set aside, he was for the time reconciled to Richard, and he could not in any sense be regarded as the leader of an opposition party. That Gower, when he became disgusted with Richard II, should have set Henry's name in the Prologue in place of that of the king, as representing his ideal of knighthood and statesmanship, may be regarded either as a coincidence with the future events, or as indicating that Gower had some discrimination in selecting a possible saviour of society; but it is certain that at this time the poet can have had no definite idea that his hero would become a candidate for the throne.

The political circumstances of the period during which the Confessio Amantis was written and revised are not very easy to disentangle. We may take it as probable that the plan of its composition, under the combined influence of Chaucer's Legend of Good Women ${ }^{1}$ and of the royal command, may have been laid about the year 1386. Before this time Richard would scarcely have been regarded by Gower as responsible for the government, and he would naturally look hopefully upon the young sovereign, then just entering upon his duties, as one who with proper admonition and due choice of advisers might turn out to be a good

[^7]ruler. During the succeeding years the evil counsellors of the king were removed by the action of the lords appellant and the Parliament, and in the year 1389 a moderate and national policy seemed to have been finally adopted by the king, with William of Wykeham as Chancellor and the young earl of Derby, who had been one of the appellants but had quarrelled with his uncle Gloucester, among the king's trusted advisers. By the light of subsequent events Gower condemned the whole behaviour of the king during this period as malicious and treacherous, but this could hardly have been his judgement of it at the time, for Richard's dissimulation, if dissimulation it were, was deep enough to deceive all parties. Consequently, up to the year 1390 at least, he may have continued, though with some misgivings, to trust in the king's good intentions and to regard him as a ruler who might effectually heal the divisions of the land, as he had already taken steps to restore peace to it outwardly. It is quite possible also that something may have come to his knowledge in the course of the year 1390-91 which shook his faith. It was at this time, in July 1390 , just at the beginning of the fourteenth year of King Richard, that his hero the earl of Derby left the court and the kingdom to exercise his chivalry in Prussia, and for this there may have been a good reason. We know too little in detail of the events of the year to be able to say exactly what causes of jealousy may have arisen between the king and his cousin, who was nearly exactly of an age with him and seems to have attracted much more attention than Richard himself at the jousts of St. Inglevert in May of this year. Whatever feeling there may have been on the side of the earl of Derby would doubtless reflect itself in the minds of his friends and supporters, and something of this kind may have deepened into certitude the suspicions which Gower no doubt already had in his heart of the ultimate intentions of Richard II. The result was that in some copies at least of the Confessio Amantis the concluding praises of the king as a ruler were removed and lines of a more general character on the state of the kingdom and the duties of a king were substituted, but still there was no mention of the earl of Derby except as before in the final Iatin lines. Two years later, 1392-93, when the earl of Derby had fairly won his spurs and at the age of twenty-five might be regarded as a model of chivalry, the mention of Richard as the suggester of the work was removed, and the name of Henry set in the text as the sole object of the dedication.

The date sixteenth year must certainly be that of this last change, but the occasion doubtless was the sending of a presentation copy to Henry, and this would hardly amount to publication. The author probably did not feel called upon publicly to affront the king by removing his name and praises, either at the beginning or the end, from the copies generally issued during his reign. Whether or not this conduct justifies the charge of time-serving timidity, which has been made against Gower, I cannot undertake to decide. He was, however, in fact rather of an opposite character, even pedantically stiff in passing judgement severely on those in high places, and not bating a syllable of what he thought proper for himself to say or for a king to hear, though while the king was young and might yet shake himself free from evil influences he was willing to take as favourable a view of his character as possible. Probably he was for some time rather in two minds about the matter, but in any case 'timid and obsequious' are hardly the right epithets for the author of the Vox Clamantis.

Before leaving this subject something should perhaps be said upon a matter which has attracted no little attention, namely the supposed quarrel between the author of the Confessio Amantis and Chaucer. It is well known that the first recension of our poem has a passage referring to Chaucer in terms of eulogy (viii. 2941*-57*), and that this was omitted when the epilogue was rewritten. This fact has been brought into connexion with the apparent reference to Gower in the Canterbury Tales, where the Man of Law in the preamble to his tale disclaims on Chaucer's behalf such 'cursed stories' as those of Canace and Apollonius, because they treat of incest. It has been thought that this was meant for a serious attack on Gower, and that he took offence at it and erased the praise of Chaucer from the Confessio Amantis.

It is known of course that the two poets were on personally friendly terms, not only from the dedication of Troilus, but from the fact that when Chaucer was sent on a mission to the Continent in 1378 , he appointed Gower one of his attorneys in his absence. It is possible that their friendship was interrupted by a misunderstanding, but it may be doubted whether there is sufficient proof of this in the facts which have been brought forward.

In the first place I question whether Chaucer's censure is to be taken very seriously. That it refers to Gower I have little doubt, but that the attack was a humorous one is almost equally clear. Chaucer was aware that some of his own tales were open to objection on the score of morality, and when he saw a chance of scoring a point on the very ground where his friend thought himself strongest, he seized it with readiness. Some degree of seriousness there probably is, for Chaucer's sound and healthy view of life instinctively rejected the rather morbid horrors to which he refers ; but it may easily be suspected that he was chiefly amused by the opportunity of publicly lecturing the moralist, who perhaps had privately remonstrated with him ${ }^{\text {' }}$. As to the notion that Chaucer had been seriously offended by the occasional and very trifing resemblances of phrase in Gower's tale of Constance with his own version of the same original, it is hardly worth discussion.

There is of course the possibility that Gower may have taken it more seriously than it was meant, and though he was not quite so devoid of a sense of humour as it has been the fashion to suppose ${ }^{2}$, yet he may well have failed to enjoy a public attack, however humorous, upon two of his tales. It must be observed, however, that if we suppose the passage in question to have been the cause of the excision of Gower's lines about Chaucer, we must assume that the publication of it took place precisely within this period of a few months which elapsed between the first and the second versions of Gower's epilogue.

Before further considering the question as to what was actually our author's motive in omitting the tribute to his brother poet, we should do well to observe that this tribute was apparently allowed to stand in some copies of the rewritten epilogue. There is one good manuscript, that in the possession of Lord Middleton, [^8]in which the verses about Chaucer not only stand in combination with the new form of epilogue, but in a text which has also the revised preface, dated two years later ${ }^{1}$. Hence it seems possible that the exclusion of the Chaucer verses was rather accidental than deliberate, and from this and other considerations an explanation may be derived which will probably seem too trivial, but nevertheless is perhaps the true one. We know from the Fairfax MS. of the Confessio Amantis and from several original copies of the Vox Clamantis that the author's method of rewriting his text was usually to erase a certain portion, sometimes a whole column or page, and substitute a similar number of lines of other matter. It will be observed here that for the thirty lines $294 \mathbf{1}^{}$ 2970, including the reference to Chaucer, are substituted thirty lines from which that reference is excluded. After this come four Latin lines replacing an equal number in the original recension, and then follow fifteen lines, 2971-2985, which are the same except a single line in the two editions. It may be that the author, wishing to mention the departure of the Confessor and the thoughts which he had upon his homeward way, sacrificed the Chaucer verses as an irrelevance, in order to find room for this matter between the Adieu of Venus and the lines beginning ' He which withinne daies sevene,' which he did not intend to alter, and that this proceeding, carried out upon a copy of the first recension which has not come down to us, determined the general form of the text for the copies with epilogue rewritten, though in a few instances care was taken to combine the allusion to Chaucer with the other alterations. Such an explanation as this would be in accord with the methods of the author in some other respects; for, as we shall see later on, the most probable explanation of the omission in the third recension of the additional passages in the fifth and seventh books, is that a first recension copy was used in a material sense as a basis for the third recension text, and it was therefore not convenient to introduce alterations which increased the number of lines in the body of the work.

iii. Analysis.

Prologus.

1-92. Preface. By the books of those that were before us we are instructed, and therefore it is good that we also should write something which may remain after our days. But to write of wisdom only is not good. I would rather go by the middle path and make a book of pleasure and profit both : and since few write in English, my meaning is to make a book * for England's sake now in the sisteenth year of King Richard. Things have changed and books are less beloved than in former days, but without them the fame and the example of the virtuous would be lost. Thus I, simple scholar as I am, purpose to write a book touching both upon the past and the present, and though I have long been sick, yet I will endeavour as I may to provide wisdom for the wise. For this prologue belongs all to wisdom, and by it the wise may recall to their memory the fortunes of the world; but after the prologue the book shall be of Love, which does great wonders among men. Also I shall speak of the vices and virtues of rulers. But as my wit is too small to admonish every man, I submit my work for correction to my own lord Henry of Lancaster, with whom my heart is in accord, and whom God has proclaimed the model of knighthood. God grant I may well achieve the work which I have taken in hand.
93-192. Temporal Rulers. In the time past things went well: there was plenty and riches, with honour for noble deeds, and each estate kept its due place. Justice was upheld and the people obeyed their rulers. .Man's heart was then shown in his face and his thought expressed by his words, virtue was exalted and vice abased. Now all is changed, and above all discord and hatred have taken the place of love, there is no stable peace, no justice and righteousness. All [^10]kingdoms are alike in this, and heaven alone knows what is to be done. The sole remedy is that those who are the world's guides should follow good counsel and should be obeyed by their people; and if king and council were at one, it might be hoped that the war would be brought to an end, which is so much against the peace of Christ's religion and from which no land gets any good. May God, who is above all things, give that peace of which the lands have need.

193-498. The Church. Formerly the life of the clergy was an example to all, there was no simony, no disputes in the Church, no ambition for worldly honour. Pride was held a vice and humility a virtue. Alms were given to the poor and the clergy gave themselves to preaching and to prayer. Thus Christ's faith was first taught, but now it is otherwise. Simony and worldly strife prevail; and if priests take part in wars, I know not who shall make the peace. But heaven is far and the world is near, and they regard nothing but vainglory and covetousness, so that the tithe goes at once to the war, as though Christ could not do them right by other ways. That which should bring salvation to the world is now the cause of evil : the prelates are such as Gregory wrote of, who desire a charge in order that they may grow rich and great, and the faith is hindered thereby. Ambition and avarice have destroyed charity ; Sloth is their librarian and delicacy has put away their abstinence. Moreover Envy everywhere burns in the clergy like the fire of Etna, as we may see now [in this year of grace 1390] at Avignon. To see the Church thus fall between two stools is a cause of sorrow to us all : God grant that it may go well at last with him who has the truth. But as a fire spreads while men are slothfully drinking, so this schism causes the new sect of Lollardy to spring up, and many another heresy among the clergy themselves. It were better to dike and delve and have the true faith, than to know all that the Bible says and err as some of these do. If men had before their eyes the virtues which Christ taught, they would not thus dispute about the Papacy. Each one attends to his own profit, but none to the general cause of the Church, and thus Christ's fold is broken and the flock is devoured. The shepherds, intent upon worldly good, wound instead of healing, and rob the sheep unjustly of their wool. Nay, they drive them among the brambles, so that they may have the wool which the thorns tear off. If the wolf comes in the way, their staff is not at hand to defend the sheep, but they are ready enough to smite the sheep with it, if they offend ever so little. There are some indeed in whom virtue dwells, whom God has called as Aaron was called, but most follow Simon at the heels, whose chariot rolls upon wheels of covetousness and pride. They teach how good it is to clothe and feed the poor, yet of their own goods they do not distribute. They say that chastity should be preserved by abstinence, but they eat daintily and lie softly, and whether they preserve their chastity thereby, I dare not say :

I hear tales, but I will not understand. Yet the vice of the evil-doers is no reproof to the good, for every man shall bear his own works.

499-584. The Commons. As for the people, it is to be feared that that may happen which has already come to pass in sundry lands, that they may break the bounds and overflow in a ruinous flood. Everywhere there is lack of law and growth of error; all say that this world has gone wrong, and every one gives his judgement as to the cause ; but he who looks inwards upon himself will be ready to excuse his God, in whom there is no default. The cause of evil is in ourselves. Some say it is fortune and some the planets, but in truth all depends upon man. No estate is secure, the fortune of it goes now up, now down, and all this is in consequence of man's doings. In the Bible I find a tale which teaches that division is the chief cause why things may not endure, and that man himself is to blame for the changes which have overthrown kingdoms.

585-662. Nabugodonosor in a dream saw an image with the head and neck of gold, the breast and arms of silver, the belly and thighs of brass, the legs of steel, and the feet of mixed steel and clay. On the feet of this image fell a great stone which rolled down from a hill, and the image was destroyed. Daniel expounded this of the successive kingdoms of the world.

663-880. These were the Four Monarchies, of Babylon, of Persia, of the Greeks, and of the Romans. We are now in the last age, that of dissension and division, as shown by the state of the Empire and the Papacy. This is that which was designated by the feet of the image.

881-1088. We are near to the end of the world, as the apostle tells us. The world stands now divided like the feet of the image. Wars are general, and yet the clergy preach that charity is the foundation of all good deeds. Man is the cause of all the evil, and therefore the image bore the likeness of a man. The heavenly bodies, the air and the earth suffer change and corruption through the sin of man, who is in himself a little world. When he is disordered in himself, the elements are all at strife with him and with each other. Division is the cause of destruction. So it is with man, who has within him diverse principles which are at strife with one another, and in whom also there is a fatal division between the body and the soul, which led to the fall from a state of innocence. The confusion of tongucs at the building of the tower of Babel was a further cause of division, and at last all peace and charity shall depart, and the stone shall fall. Thenceforward every man shall dwell either in heaven, where all is peace, or in hell, which is full of discord.

Would God that there were in these days any who could set peace on the earth, as Arion once by harping brought beasts and men into accord. But this is a matter which only God can direct.

Lib. I.
1-92. I cannot stretch my hand to heaven and set in order the world : so great a task is more than I am able to compass: I must let that alone and treat of other things. Therefore I think to change from this time forth the style of my writings, and to speak of a matter with which all the world has to do, and that is Love; wherein almost all are out of rule and measure, for no man is able to resist it or to find a remedy for it. If there be anything in this world which is governed blindly by fortune, it is love: this is a game in which no man knows whether he shall win or lose. I am myself one who belongs to this school, and I will tell what befel me not long since in regard to love, that others may take example thereby.

93-202. I fared forth to walk in the month of May, when every bird has chosen his mate and rejoices over the love which he has achieved; but I was further off from mine than earth is from heaven. So to the wood I went, not to sing with the birds, but to weep and lament; and after a time I fell to the ground and wished for death. Then I looked up to the heaven and prayed the god and the goddess of love to show me some grace. Anon I saw them; and he, the king of love, passed me by with angry look and cast at me a fiery lance, which pierced through my heart. But the queen remained, and asked me who I was, and bade me make known my malady. I told her that I had served her long and asked only my due wage, but she frowned and said that there were many pretenders, who in truth had done no service, and bade me tell the truth and show forth all my sickness. 'That can I well do,' I replied, 'if my life may last long enough.' Then she looked upon me and said, ' $M y$ will is first that thou confess thyself to my priest.' And with that she called Genius, her priest, and he came forth and sat down to hear my shrift.

203-288. This worthy priest bade me tell what I had felt for love's sake, both the joy and the sorrow ; and I fell down devoutly on my knees and prayed him to question me from point to point, lest I should forget things which concerned my shrift, for my heart was disturbed so that I could not myself direct my wits. He replied that he was there to hear my confession and to question me: but he would not only speak of love; for by his office of priest he was bound to set forth the moral vices. Yet he would show also the properties of Love, for he was retained in the service of Venus and knew little of other things. His purpose was to expound the nature of every vice, as it became a priest to do, and so to apply his teaching to the matter of love that I should plainly understand his lore.

289-574. Sins of Seeing and Hearing. I prayed him to say his will, and I would obey, and he bade me confess as touching my five senses, which are the gates through which things come into the heart, and first of the principal and most perilous, the sense of sight. Many a man has done mischief to love through seeing, and often the fiery dart of love pierces the heart through the eye. (289-332.)

CONFESSIO AMANTIS. ANALYSIS xxxiii

Ovid tells a tale of the evils of 'mislook,' how Acteon when hunting came upon Diana and her nymphs bathing, and because he did not turn away his eyes, he was changed into a hart and torn to pieces by his own hounds. (333-378.)

Again, the Gorgons were three sisters, who had but one eye between them, which they passed one to another, and if any man looked upon them he was straightway turned into a stone. These were all killed by Perseus, to whom Pallas lent a shield with which he covered his face, and Mercury a sword with which he slew the monsters. (389435.)

My priest therefore bade me beware of misusing my sight, lest I also should be turned to stone; and further he warned me to take good heed of my hearing, for many a vanity comes to man's heart through the ears. (436-462.)

There is a serpent called Aspidis, which has a precious stone in his head, but when a man tries to overcome him by charms in order to win this stone, he refuses to hear the enchantment, laying one car close to the earth and stopping the other with his tail.. (463-480.)

Moreover, in the tale of Troy we read of Sirens, who are in the form of women above and of fishes below, and these sing so sweetly, that the sailors who pass are enchanted by it and cannot steer their ships: so they are wrecked and torn to pieces by the monsters. Uluxes, however, escaped this peril by stopping the ears of his company, and then they slew many of them. (481-529.)

From these examples (he said) I might learn how to keep the eye and the ear from folly, and if I could control these two, the rest of the senses were easy to rule. (530-549.)

I made my confession then, and said that as for my eyes I had indeed cast them upon the Gorgon Medusa, and my heart had been changed into stone, upon which my lady had graven an eternal mark of love. Moreover, 1 was guilty also as regards my ear; for when I heard my lady speak, my reason lost all rule, and I did not do as Uluxes did, but fell at once in the place where she was, and was torn to pieces in my thought. (550-567.)

God amend thee, my son, he said. I will ask now no more of thy senses, but of other things. (568-574.)

The Seven deadly Vices.-Pride.
575-1234. Hypocrisy. Pride, the first of the seven deadly Vices, has five ministers, of whom the first is called Hypocrisy. Hast thou been of his company, my son?

I know not, father, what hypocrisy means. I beseech you to teach me and I will confess. (575-593.)

A hypocrite is one who feigns innocence without, but is not so within. Such are many of those who belong to the religious orders, with some of those who occupy the high places of the Church, and others also who pretend to piety, while all their design is to increase their worldly wealth. (594-672.)

There are lovers also of this kind, who deceive by flattery and soft speech, and who pretend to be suffering sickness for love, but are ready always to beguile the woman who trusts them. Art thou one of these, my son?
Nay, father, for I have no need to feign : my heart is always more sick than my visage, and I am more humble towards my lady within than any outward sign can show. I will not say but that I may have been guilty towards others in my youth; but there is one towards whom my word has ever been sincere.

It is well, my son, to tell the truth always towards love; for if thou deceive and win thereby, thou wilt surely repent it afterwards, as a tale which I will tell may show. (672-760.)

Mundus and Paulina. At Rome, in the time of Tiberius, a worthy lady Pauline was deceived by Mundus, who bribed the priests of Isis and induced them to bring her to the temple at night on pretence of meeting the god Anubuṣ. Mundus concealed himself in the temple and personated the god. Meeting her on her way home he let her understand the case, and she, overcome with grief and shame, reported the matter to her husband. The priests were put to death, Mundus was sent into exile, and the image of Isis was thrown into the Tiber. (761-1059.)

The Trojan Horse. Again, to take a case of the evil wrought by Hypocrisy in other matters, we read how, when the Greeks could not capture Troy, they made a horse of brass and secretly agreeing with Antenor and Eneas they concluded a feigned peace with the Trojans and desired to bring this horse as an offering to Minerva into the city. The gates were too small to admit it, and so the wall was broken down, and the horse being brought in was offered as an evidence of everlasting peace with Troy. The Greeks then departed to their ships, as if to set sail, but landed again in the night on a signal from Sinon. They came up through the broken gate, and slew those within, and burnt the city. (1060-1 189.)

Thus often in love, when a man seems most true, he is most false, and for a time such lovers speed, but afterwards they suffer punishment. Therefore eschew Hypocrisy in love. (1190-1234.)

1235-1875. Inobedience. The second point of Pride is Inobedience, which bows before no law, whether of God or man. Art thou, my son, disobedient to love?

Nay, father, except when my lady bids me forbear to speak of my love, or again when she bids me choose a new mistress. She might as well say, 'Go, take the Moon down from its place in heaven,' as bid me remove her love out of my breast. Thus far I disobey, but in no other thing. (1235-1342.)

There are two attendants, my son, on this vice, called Murmur and Complaint, which grudge at all the fortune that betides, be it good or bad. And so among lovers there are those who will not faithfully submit to love, but complain of their fortune, if they fail of anything that they desire.

My father, I confess that at times I am guilty of this, when my lady frowns upon me, but I dare not say a word to her which might displease her. I murmur and am disobedient in my heart, and so far I confess that I am 'unbuxom.'

I counsel thee, my son, to be obedient always to love's hest, for obedience often avails where strength may do nothing; and of this I remember an example written in a chronicle. (1343-1406.)

There was a knight, nephew to the emperor, by name Florent, chivalrous and amorous, who seeking adventures was taken prisoner by enemies. He had slain the son of the captain of the castle to which he was led; and they desired to take vengeance on him, but feared the emperor. An old and cunning dame, grandmother to the slain man, proposed a condition. He should be allowed to go, on promise of returning within a certain time, and then he should suffer death unless he could answer rightly the question, 'What do all women most desire ?' He gave his pledge, and sought everywhere an answer to the question, but without success. When the day approached, he set out; and as he passed through a forest, he saw a loathly hag sitting under a tree. She offered to save him if he would take her as his wife. He refused at first, but then seeing no other way, he accepted, on the condition that he should try all other answers first, and if they might save him he should be free. She told him that what all women most desire is to be sovereign of man's love. He saved himself by this answer, and returned to find her, being above all things ashamed to break his troth. Foul as she was, he respected her womanhood, and set her upon his horse before him. He reached home, journeying by night and hiding himself by day, and they were wedded in the night, she in her fine clothes looking fouler than before. When they were in bed, he turned away from her, but she claimed his bond; and he turning towards her saw a young lady of matchless beauty by his side. She stayed him till he should make his choice, whether he would have her thus by night or by day; and he, despairing of an answer, left it to her to decide. By thus making her his sovereign, he had broken the charm which bound her. She was the king's daughter of Sicily, and had been transformed by her stepmother, till she should win the love and sovereignty of a peerless knight. Thus obedience may give a man good fortune in love. (1407-1861.)

xxxvi GOWER'S ENGLISH WORKS

Know then, my son, that thou must ever obey thy love and foslow her will.

By this example, my father, I shall the better keep my observance in love. Tell me now if there be any other point of Pride. (1862-1582), 1883-2383. SURQLIDRY or PRESLMPTION holds the third place is the court of Pride. He does everything by guess and often repents afterwards : he will follow no counsel but his own, depends only on bis oun wit, and will not even return thanhs to God.

When he is a lover, he thinks himself worthy to love any queen, and he often imagines that he is loved when he 15 not. Tell me, what of this, my son?

I trow there is no man less guilty here than I, or who thons hamself less wortl.y. Love 15 free to all men and hides in the heart unseen, but I shall not for that imagine that I am worthy to jove. I confess, however, that I have allowed myself to think that I was beloved when I was not, and thus I have been guilty. But if ye would tell me a ta.e against this vice, I should fare the better. ( 1883 1976.)

My son, the proud knight Capaneus trusted so in himself that he would not pray to the gods, and said that prayer was begotten only of cowardice. But on a day, when he assanled the city of Thelres, God took arms agamst his pride and smote him to dust with a thunderbolt. Thus when a man thinks himself most strong, be is mearest to destruc. tron. (1977.2009.)

Again, when a man thinks that he can judge the faults of others and forgets his own, evil often comes to him, as in the tale which follows.

The Trump of Death. There was a king of Hungary, who went forth with lis court in the month of May, and meeting two pilgrims of great age, alighted from his car and kissed their hands and feet, giving them alms also. The lords of the land were tuspleased that the king should thus abase his royalty, and among them chefly the king's brother, who satd that he would rebuke the king for his deed. When they were returned, the brother spoke to the king, and said he must excuse hmself to has lords. He answered courteously and they went to supper.

Now there was ordaned by the law a certain trumpet of brass, $u$ hich was cailed the Trump of Death: and when any lord should be put to death, this was sounded before his gate. The king then on that niglit sent the man who had this office, to blow the trumpet at his brother's gate. Hearing the sound he knew that he must die, and called his friends togrether, who advised that he with his wife and has five chatiter should go in all humshly to entreat the king's pardon. So they went lamenting through the clly and came to the court. Men told the king how it wats, and he comung forth blamed has brother because be had been so moved by a mere human sentence of death, which might be revoked. 'Thou canst not now marvel', he said, 'at that which I did: for I saw in the pilgrims the image of my own death, as appointed by God's ordinance, and to this law I did obeisance; for compared to this all other laws are as nothing. Therefore, my brother, fear God with all thine heart, for all shall die and be equal in his sight.' Thus the king admonished his brother and forgave him. (2010-2253.)

I beseech you, father, to tell me some example of this in the cause of love.

My son, in love as well as in other things this vice should be eschewed, as a tale shows which Ovid told.

There was one Narcissus, who had such pride that he thought no woman worthy of him. On a day he went to hunt in the forest, and being hot and thirsty lay down to drink from a spring. There he saw the image of his face in the water and thought it was a nymph. Love for her came upon him and he in vain entreated her to come out to him : at length in despair he smote himself against a rock till he was dead. The nymphs of the springs and of the woods in pity buried his body, and from it there sprang flowers which bloom in the winter, against the course of nature, as his folly was. (2254-2366.)

My father, I shall ever avoid this vice. I would my lady were as humble towards me as I am towards her. Ask me therefore further, if there be ought else.
God forgive thee, my son, if thou have sinned in this: but there is moreover another vice of Pride which cannot rule his tongue, and this also is an evil. (2367-2398.)
2399-2680. Avantance. This vice turns praise into blame by loud proclaiming of his own merit; and so some lovers do. Tell me then if thou hast ever received a favour in love and boasted of it afterwards.

Nay, father, for I never received any favour of which I could boast. Ask further then, for here I am not guilty.
That is well, my son, but know that love hates this vice above all others, as thou mayest learn by an example. (2399-2458.)

Alboin and Rosemund. Albinus was king of the Lombards, and he in war with the Geptes killed their king Gurmond in battle, and made a cup of his skull. Also he took Gurmond's daughter Rosemund as his wife. When the wars were over, he made a great feast, that his queen might make acquaintance with the lords of his kingdom; and at the banquet his pride arose, and he sent for this cup, which was richly set in gold and gems, and bade his wife drink of it, saying, 'Drink with thy father.' She, not knowing what cup it was, took it and drank ; and then the king told how he had won it by his victory, and had won also his wife's love, who had thus drunk of the skull. She said nothing, but thought of the unkindness of her lord in thus boasting, as he sat by her side, that he had killed her father and made a cup of his skull. Then after the feast she planned vengeance with Glodeside her maid.

A knight named Helmege, the king's butler, loved Glodeside. To him the queen gave herself in place of her maid, and then making herself known, she compelled him to help her. They slew Albinus, but were themselves compelled to flee, taking refuge with the Duke of Ravenna, who afterwards caused them to be put to death by poison. (2459-2646.)

It is good therefore that a man hide his own praise, both in other things and also in love, or else he may fail of his purpose.

2681-3066. Vain Glory thinks of this world only and delights in new things. He will change his guise like a chameleon. He will make carols, balades, roundels and virelays, and if he gets any advantage in love, he rejoices over it so that he forgets all thought of death. Tell me if thou hast done so.

My father, I may not wholly excuse myself, in that I have been for love the better arrayed, and have attempted rondels, balades, virelays and carols for her whom I love, and sung them moreover, and made myself merry in chamber and in hall. But I fared none the better : my glory was in vain. She would not hear my songs, and my fine array brought me no reason to be glad. And yet I have had gladness at times in hearing how men praised her, and also when I have tidings that she is well. Tell me if I am to blame for this.

I acquit thee, my son, and on this matter I think to tell a tale how God does vengeance on this vice. Listen now to a tale that is true, though it be not of love. (2681-2784.)

There was a king of whom I spoke before, Nabugodonosor by name. None was so mighty in his days, and in his Pride he ruled the earth as a god. This king in his sleep saw a tree which overshadowed the whole earth, and all birds and beasts had lodging in it or fed beneath it. Then he heard a voice bidding to hew down the tree and destroy it; but the root (it said) should remain, and bear no man's heart, but feed on grass like an ox, till the water of the heaven should have washed him seven times and he should be made humble to the will of God. The King could find none to interpret this dream, and sent therefore for Daniel. He said that the tree betokened the king, and that as the tree was hewn down, so his kingdom should be overthrown, and he should pasture like an ox and be rained upon and afflicted, until he acknowledged the greatness of God. The punishment was ordained, he said, for his vain glory, and if he would leave this and entreat for grace, he might perchance escape the evil.

But Pride will not suffer humility to stand with him. Neither for his dream nor yet for Daniel's word did this king leave his vain glory, and so that which had been foretold came upon him.

Then after seven years he remembered his former state and wept; and though he might not find words, he prayed within his heart to Giod and vowed to leave his vain glory, reaching up his feet towards the heaven, kneeling and braying for mercy. Suddenly he was changed again into a man and received his power as before, and the pride of vain glory passed for ever from his heart. (27853042.)

Be not thou, my son, like a beast, but take humility in hand, for a proud man cannot win love. I think now again to tell thee a tale which may teach thee to follow Humility and eschew Pride.

3067-3425. Humility. The Three Questions. There was once a young and wise king, who delighted in propounding difficult questions, and one knight of his court was so ready in answering them that the king conceived jealousy and resolved to put him to confusion. He bade him therefore answer these three questions on pain of death : (1) What is it that has least need and yet men help it most? (2) What is worth most and yet costs least ? (3) What costs most and is worth least? The knight went home to consider, but the more he beat his brains, the more he was perplexed. He had two daughters, the younger fourteen years of age, who, perceiving his grief, entreated him to tell her the cause. At length he did so, and she asked to be allowed to answer for him to the king. When the day came, they went together to the court, and the knight left the answers to the maiden, at which all wondered. She replied to the first question that it was the Eaith, upon which men laboured all the year round, and yet it had no need of help, being itself the source of all life. As to the second, it was Humility, through which God sent down his Son, and chose Mary above all others ; and yet this costs least to maintain, for it brings about no wars among men. The third question, she said, referred to Pride, which cost Lucifer and the rebel angels the loss of heaven, and Adam the loss of paradise, and was the cause also of so many evils in the world.

The king was satisfied, and looking on the maiden he said, ' I like thine answer well, and thee also, and if thou wert of lineage equal to these lords, I would take thee for my wife. Ask what thou wilt of me and thou shalt have it.' She asked an earldom for her father, and this granted, she thanked the king upon her knees, and claimed fulfilment of his former word. Whatever she may have been once, she was now an earl's daughter, and he had promised to take her as his wife. The king, moved by love, gave his assent, and thus it was. This king ruled Spain in old days and his name was Alphonse : the knight was called Don Petro, and the daughter wise Peroneile. (3067-3402.)
Thus, my son, thou mayest know the evil of Pride, which fell from his place in heaven and in paradise; but Humility is gentle and debonnaire. Therefore leave Pride and take Humility.

My father, I will not forget: but now seek further of my shrift.
My son, I have spoken enough of Pride, and I think now to tell of Envy, which is a hellish vice, in that it does evil without any cause. (3403-3446.)

Lib. II.

1-220. SORROW FOR ANOTHER'S JOY. The next after Pride is Envy, who burns ever in his thought, if he sees another preferred to himself or more worthy. Hast thou, my son, in love been sick of another man's welfare?

Yea, father, a thousand times, when I have seen another blithe of love. I am then like Etna, which burns ever within, or like a ship driven about by the winds and waves. But this is only as regards my lady, when I see lovers approach her and whisper in her ear. Not that I mistrust her wisdom, for none can keep her honour better; yet when I see her make good cheer to any man, I am full of Envy to see him glad.

My son, the hound which cannot eat chaff, will yet drive away the oxen who come to the barn ; and so it is often with love. If a man is out of grace himself, he desires that another should fail. (1-96.)

Acis and Galatea. Ovid tells a tale how Poliphemus loved Galathea, and she, who loved another, rejected him. He waited then for a chance to grieve her in her love, and he saw her one day in speech with young Acis under a cliff by the sea. His heart was all afire with Envy, and he fled away like an arrow from a bow, and ran roaring as a wild beast round Etna. Then returning he pushed down a part of the cliff upon Acis and slew him. She fled to the sea, where Neptune took her in his charge, and the gods transformed Acis into a spring with fresh streams, as he had been fresh in love, and were wroth with Polipheme for his Envy. (97-200.)

Thus, my son, thou mayest understand that thou must let others be.
My father, the example is good, and I will work no evil in love for Envy. (200-220.)

221-382. JOY FOR ANOTHER'S GRIEF. This vice rejoices when he sees other men sad, and thinks that he rises by another's fall, as in other things, so also in love. Hast thou done so, my son ?

Yes, father, J confess that when I see the lovers of my lady get a fall, I rejoice at it; and the more they lose, the more I think that I shall win : and if I am none the better for it, yet it is a pleasure to me to see another suffer the same pains as $I$. Tell me if this be wrong.

This kind of Envy, my son, can never be right. It will sometimes be willing to suffer loss, in order that another may also suffer, as a tale will show. (221-290.)

The Travellers and the Angel. Jupiter sent down an angel to report of the condition of mankind. He joined himself to two travellers, and he found by their talk that one was covetous and the other envious. On parting he told them that he came from God, and in return for their kindness he would grant them a boon : one should choose a gift and the other should have the double of what his fellow asked. The covetous man desired the other to ask, and the other, unwilling that his fellow should have more good than he, desired to be deprived of the sight of one eye, in order that his fellow might lose both. This was done, and the envious man rejoiced. (291-364.)

This is a thing contrary to nature, to seek one's own harm in order to grieve another.

My father, I never did so but in the way that I have said: tell me if there be more.

383-1871. Detraction. There is one of the brood of Envy called Detraction. He has Malebouche in his service, who cannot praise any without finding fault. He is like the beetle which flies over the fields, and cares nothing for the spring flowers, but makes his feast of such filth as he may find. So this envious jangler makes no mention of a man's virtue, but if he find a fault he will proclaim it openly. So also in Love's court many envious tales are told. If thou hast made such janglery, my son, shrive thee thereof. (383-454.)

Yes, father, but not openly. When I meet my dear lady and think of those who come about her with false tales, all to deceive an innocent (though she is wary enough and can well keep herself), my heart is envious and I tell the worst I know against them; and so I would against the truest and best of men, if he loved my lady; for I cannot endure that any should win there but I. This I do only in my lady's ear, and above all I never tell any tale which touches her good name. Tell me then what penance I shall endure for this, for I have told you the whole truth.

My son, do so no more. Thy lady, as thou sayest, is wise and wary, and there is no need to tell her these tales. Moreover she will like thee the less for being envious, and often the evil which men plan towards others falls on themselves. Listen to a tale on this matter. (454-586.)

Tale of Constance. The Roman Emperor Tiberius Constantinus had a daughter Constance, beautiful, wise, and full of faith. She converted to Christianity certain merchants of Barbary, who came to Rome to sell their wares, and they, being questioned by the Soldan when they returned, so reported of Constance that he resolved to ask for her in marriage. He sent to Rome and agreed to be converted, and Constance was sent with two cardinals and many other lords, to be his bride. But the mother of the Soldan was moved by jealousy. She invited the whole company to a feast, and there slew her own son and all who had had to do with the marriage except Constance herself, whom she ordered to be placed alone in a rudderless ship with victuals for five years, and so to be committed to the winds and waves. (587-713.)

For three years she drifted under God's guidance, and at last came to land in Northumberland, near a castle on the bank of Humber, which was kept by one Elda for the king of that land Allee, a Saxon and a worthy knight. Elda found her in the ship and committed her to the care of Hermyngheld his wife, who loved her and was converted by her. Hermyngheld in the name of Christ restored sight to a blind man, at which all wondered, and Elda was converted to the faith. On the morrow he rode to the king, and thinking to please him, who was then unwedded, told him of Constance. The king said he would come and see her. Elda sent before him a knight whom he trusted, and this knight had loved Constance, but she had rejected him, so that his love was turned to hate. When he came to the castle he delivered the message, and they prepared to receive the king; but in the night he cut the throat of Hermyngheld and placed the bioody knife under the bed where Constance lay. Elda came the same night and found his wife lying dead and Constance sleeping by her. The false knight accused Constance and discovered the knife where he had placed it. Elda was not convinced, and the knight swore to her guilt upon a book. Suddenly the hand of heaven smote him and his eyes fell out of his head, and a voice bade him confess the truth, which he did, and thereupon died. (714-885.)

After this the king came, and desiring to wed Constance, agreed to receive baptism. So a bishop came from Bangor in Wales and christened him and many more, and married Constance to the king. She would not tell who she was, but the king perceived that she was a noble creature. God visited her and she was with child, but the king was compelled to go out on a war, and left his wife with Elda and the bishop. A son was born and baptized by the name of Moris, and letters were written to the king, and the bearer of them, who had to pass by Knaresborough, stayed there to tell the news to the king's mother Domilde. She in the night changed the letters for others, which said, as from the keepers of the queen, that she had been delivered of a monster. The messenger carried the letters to the king, who wrote back that they should keep his wife carefully till he came again. On his return the messenger stayed again at Knaresborough, and I)omilde substituted a letter bidding them on pain of death place Constance and her child in the same ship in which she had come, and commit them to the sea. They grieved bitterly, but obeyed. She prayed to heaven for help and devoted herself to the care of the child (886-1083). After the end of that year the ship came to land near a castle in Spain, where a heathen admiral was lord, who had a steward named Thelouis, a false renegade. He came to see the ship and found Constance, but he let none else see her; and at night he returned, thinking to have her at his will. He swore to kill her if she resisted him, and she bade him look out at the port to see if any man was near: then on the prayer of Constance he was thrown out of the ship and drowned. A wind arose which took her from the land, and after three years she came to a place where a great navy lay. The lord of these ships questioned her, but she told him little, giving her name as Couste. He said that he came from taking vengeance on the Saracens for their treachery, but could hear no news of Constance. He was the Senator of Rome and was married to a niece of the Emperor named Heleine. She came to Rome with her child and dwelt with his wife till twelve years were gone, and none knew what she was, but all loved her well. (1084-1225.)

In the meantime king Allee discovered the treachery and took vengeance on his mother, who was burnt to death after confession of her guilt ; and all said that she had well deserved her punishment and lamented for Constance. Having finished his wars, the king resolved to go to Rome for absolution, and leaving Edwyn his heir to rule the land, he set forth with Elda. Arcennus reported to his wife and to Couste the coming of king Allee, and Couste swooned for joy. The king, after seeing the Pope and relieving his conscience, made a feast, to which he invited the Senator and others. Moris went also, and his mother bade him stand at the feast in sight of the king. The king seeing him thought him like his wife Constance, and loved him without knowing why. He asked Arcennus if the child were his son, and from him he heard his story and the name of his mother. The king smiled at the name 'Couste,' knowing that it was Saxon for Constance, and was eager to ascertain the truth. After the feast he besought the Senator to bring him home to see this Couste, and never man was more joyful than he was when he saw his wife. (1226-1445.)

The king remained at Rome for a time with Constance, but still she did not tell him who she was. After a while she prayed him to make an honourable feast before he left the city and to invite the Emperor, who was at a place a few miles away from the city. Moris was sent to beseech him to come and eat with them, which request he granted ; and at the time appointed they all went forth to meet the Emperor. Constance, riding forward to welcome him, made herself known to him as his daughter. His heart was overcome, as if he had seen the dead come to life again, and all present shed tears. So a parliament was held and Moris was named heir to the Emperor. King Allee and Constance returned home to the great joy of their land ; but soon after this the king died, and Constance came again to Rome. After a short time the Emperor also died in her arms, and she herself in the next year following. Moris was crowned Emperor and known as 'the most Christian.' (1446-1 598.)

Thus love at last prevailed and the false tongues were silenced. Beware then thou of envious backbiting and lying, and if thou wouldest know further what mischief is done by backbiting, hear now another tale. (1599-1612.)

Demetrius and Perseus. Philip king of Macedoine had two sons,

Demetrius and Perseus. Demetrius the elder was the better knight, and he was heir to the kingdom; but Perseus had envy of himand slandered hum to h.s father behind his back, saying that he had sold them to the Romans. Demetrius was condemned on suborned evidence and by a comupt judge, and so put to death. Perseus then grew so proud that he disdamed his father and usurped his power, so that the father perceived the wrong which had been done; but the other party was so strong that he could not execute justice, and thus he died of greef.

Then Perseus took the government and made war on Rome, gathering a great host. The Romans had a Consul named Paul Emulus, who took this war in hand. His little daughter wept when she parted from him, because her little dog named Perse was dead, and this seemed to him a prognostic of success, for Perseus had spoken against his brother jike a dng barking behind a man's back. Perseus rode with his host, not foresee.ng the mischuef, and he lost a large part of his army by the breaking of the ice of the I anube. Paulas attacked him and conquered both him and lus land, so that Perseus himself died like a dog in prison, and his herr, who was exiled from lus lan i, gamed his bread by working at a craft in Rome. (1613-1861.)

Lo, my son, what evil is done by the Envy which endeatours to hinder another.

I will avord it, my father; but say on, if there be more.
My son, there is a fourth, as deceptive as the guiles of a juggler. and this is cal.ed False Semblant. (1862-1878.)
1879-2319. False Semilant, This is above all the spring from which deceit flows. It seems fair weather on that flood; but it is not so in truth. False Semblant is allied with Hypocrsy, and Envy steers their boat. Therefore flee this vice and let thy semblant always be true. When Enty desires to decenve, it is $f$ alse Semblant who is his messenger; and as the muror shows what was never whinn it, so he shows in his countenance that which is not in his heart. Dost thou follow this vice, my son?

Nay, father, for ought I know; but q̧uestion me, I pray you.
Tell me then, my son, if ever thou hast ganed the contidence of any man in order to tell out his secrets and himder him in his love. Dost thou practuse such devices?

For the most part I say nay; but in some measure I confess I may be reckuned with those that use false colours, I feign to my fellow at tames, untul I know his counsels in love, and if they concern my lady, I endeavour to overthrow them. If they bave to do with others than she, 1 break no covenant with him nor try to hinder him in his love; but With regard to her my ears and my beart are open to hear all that any man will say, - first that I may excuse her of they speak ill of her, and secondly that I may know who her lovers are. Then I tell tales of them to my lady, to hinder their suit and further mine. And though

I myself have no help from it, I can conceal nothing from her which it concerns her to know. To him who loves not my lady, let him love as many others as he will, I feign no semblant, and his tales sink no deeper than my ears. Now, father, what is your doom and what pain must I suffer? (1879-2076.)

My son, all virtue should be praised and all vice blamed : therefore put no visor on thy face. Yet many men do so nowadays, and especially I hear how False Semblant goes with those whom we call Lombards, men who are cunning to feign that which is not, and who take from us the profit of our own land, while we bear the burdens. They have a craft called $F a$ crere, and against this no usher can bar the door. This craft discovers everything and makes it known in foreign lands to our grievous loss. Those who read in books the examples of this vice of False Semblant, will be the more on their guard against it. (2077-2144.)
Hercules and Deianira. I will tell thee a tale of False Semblant, and how Deianira and Hercules suffered by it. Hercules had cast his heart only upon this fair Deianira, and once he desired to pass over a river with her, but he knew not the ford. There was there a giant called Nessus, who envying Hercules thought to do him harm by treachery, since he dared not fight against him openly. Therefore, pretending friendship, he offered to carry the lady across and set her safe on the other shore. Hercules was well pleased, and Nessus took her upon his shoulder; but when he was on the further side, he attempted to carry her away with him. Hercules came after them and shot him with a poisoned arrow, but before he died he gave Deianira his shirt stained with his heart's blood, telling her that if her lord were untrue, this shirt would make his love return to her. She kept it well in coffer and said no word. The years passed, and Hercules set his heart upon Eole, the king's daughter of Eurice, so that he dressed himself in her clothes and she was clothed in his, and no remedy could be found for his folly. Deianira knew no other help, but took this shirt and sent it to him. The shirt set his body on fire, and clove to it so that it could not be torn away. He ran to the high wood and tore down trees and made a huge fire, into which he leapt and was burnt both flesh and bones. And all this came of the False Semblant which Nessus made. Therefore, my son, beware, since so great a man was thus lost. (21452312.)

Father, I will no more have acquaintance with False Semblant, and I will do penance for my former feigning. Ask more now, if more there be.
My son, there is yet the fifth which is conceived of Envy, and that is Supplantation, by means of which many have lost their labour in love as in other things. (2313-2326.)

2327-31IO. SUPPLANTation. This vice has often overthrown men and deprived them of their dignities. Supplantation obtains for himself the profit of other men's loss, and raises himself upon their fall. In the same way there are lovers who supplant others and deprive them of what is theirs by right, reaping what others have sown. If thou hast done so, my son, confess.

For ought I know, father, I am guiltless in deed, but not so in thought. If I had had the power, I would long ago have made appropriation of other men's love. But this only as regards one, for whom I let all others go. If I could, I would turn away her heart from her other lovers and supplant them, no matter by what device : but force I dare not use for fear of scandal. If this be sin, my father, I am ready to redress my guilt. (2327-2428.)

My son, God beholds a man's thought, and if thou knewest what it were to be a supplanter in love, thou wouldest for thine own sake take heed. At Troy Agamenon supplanted Achilles, and Diomede Troilus. Geta and Amphitrion too were friends, and Geta was the lover of Almena : but when he was absent, Amphitrion made his way to her chamber and counterfeited his voice, whereby he obtained admittance to her bed. Geta came afterwards, but she refused to let him in, thinking that her lover already lay in her arms. (2429-2500.)

The False Bachelor. There was an Emperor of Rome who ruled in peace and had no wars. His son was chivalrous and desirous of fame, so he besought leave to go forth and seek adventures, but his father refused to grant it. At length he stole away with a knight whom he trusted, an ll they took service with the Soldan of Persia, who had war with the Caliph of Egypt. There this prince did valiantly and gained renown; moreover, he was overtaken by love of the Soldan's fair daughter, so that his prowess grew more and more, and none could stand against him. At length the Soldan and the Caliph drew to a battle, and the Soldan took a gold ring of his daughter and commanded her, if he should fall in the fight, to marry the man who should produce this ring. In the battle this Roman did great deeds, and Egypt fled in his presence. As they of Persia pursued, an arrow struck the Soldan and he was borne wounded to a tent. Dying he gave his daughter's ring to this knight of Rome. After his burial a parliament was appointed, and on the night before it met, this young lord told his secret to his bachelor and showed him the ring. The bachelor feigned gladness, but when his lord was asleep, he stole the ring from his purse and put another in its stead. When the court was set, the young lady was brought forth. The bachelor drew forth the ring and claimed her hand, which was allowed him in spite of protest, and so he was crowned ruler of the empire. His lord fell sick of sorrow, caring only for the loss of his love; and before his death he called the lords to him and sent a message to his lady, and wrote also a letter to his father the Emperor. Thus he died, and the treason was known. The false bachelor was sent to Rome on demand of the Emperor, to receive punishment there, and the dead body also was taken thither for burial. (2501-2781.)

Thus thou mayest be well advised, my son, not to do so ; and above all, when Pride and Envy are joined together, no man can find a remedy for the evil. Of this I find a true example in a chronicle of old time, showing how Supplant worked once in Holy Church. I know not if it be so now. (2782-2802.)

Pope Boniface. At Rome Pope Nicholas died, and the cardinals met in conclave to choose another Pope. They agreed upon a holy recluse full of ghostly virtues, and he was made Pope and called Celestin. There was a cardinal, however, who had long desired the papacy, and he was seized with such envy that he thought to supplant the Pope by artifice. He caused a young priest of his family to be appointed to the Pope's chamber, and he told this man to take a trumpet of brass and by means of it speak to the Pope at midnight through the wall, bidding him renounce his dignity. This he did thrice ; and the Pope, conceiving it to be a voice from heaven, asked the cardinals in consistory whether a Pope might resign his place. All sat silent except this cardinal of whom we have spoken, and he gave his opinion that the Pope could make a decree by which this might be done. He did so, and the cardinal was elected in his stead under the name of Boniface. But such treason cannot be hid; it is like the spark of fire in the roof, which when blown by the wind blazes forth. Boniface openly boasted of his device; and such was his pride that he took quarrel with Louis, King of France, and laid his kingdom under interdict. The king was counselled by his barons, and he sent Sir William de Langharet, with a company of men-at-arms, who captured the Pope at Pontsorge near Avignon and took him into France, where he was put in bonds and died of hunger, eating off both his hands. Of him it was said that he came in like a fox, reigned like a lion, and died like a dog. By his example let all men beware of gaining office in the Church by wrongful means. God forbid that it should be of our days that the Abbot Joachim spake, when he prophesied of the shameful traffic which should dishonour the Church of God. (28033084.)

Envy it was that moved Joab to slay Abner treacherously; and for Envy Achitophel hanged himself when his counsel was not preferred. Seneca says that Envy is the common wench who keeps tavern for the Court, and sells liquour which makes men drunk with desire to surpass their fellows. (3085-3IIO.)

Envy is in all ways unpleasant in love; the fire within dries up the blood which should flow kindly through his veins. He alone is moved by pure malice in that which he does. Therefore, my son, if thou wouldest find a way to love, put away Envy.

Reason would that I do so, father ; but in order that I may flee from this vice, I pray you to tell me a remedy.

My son, as there is physic for the sick, so there are virtues for the vices, which quench them as water does a fire. Against Envy is set Charity, the mother of Pity, which causes a man to be willing to bear evil himself rather than that another should suffer. Hear from me a tale about this, and mark it well. (3111-3186.)

Constantine and Silvester. In Latin books I find how Constantine, the Emperor of Rome, had a leprosy which could not be cured, and wise men ordered for his healing a bath of the blood of children under seven years old. Orders were sent forth, and mothers brought their children from all parts to the palace. The Emperor, hearing the noise of lamentation, looked forth in the morning and was struck with pity. He thought to himself that rich and poor were all alike in God's sight, and that a man should do to others as he would that others should do to him. He resolved rather to suffer his malady than that so much innocent blood should be shed, and he sent the mothers and children away happy to their homes. In the night he had a vision of Saint Peter and Saint Paul, saying to him, that as he had shown mercy, mercy should be shown to him, and bidding him send to fetch Silvester from Mount Celion, where he was hiding for fear of the Emperor, who had been a foe to Christ's faith. They told him their names and departed, and he did as they commanded. Silvester came and preached to the Emperor of the redemption of mankind and the last judgement, and said that God had accepted the charity and pity which he had shown. Constantine received baptism in the same vessel which had been prepared for the blood; and as he was being baptized, a light from heaven shone in the place and the leprosy fell from him as it were fishes' scales. Thus body and soul both were cleansed. The Emperor sent forth letters bidding all receive baptism on pain of death, and founded two churches in Rome for Peter and Paul, to which he gave great worldly possessions. His will was good, but the working of his deed was bad. As he made the gift, a voice was heard from heaven saying that the poison of temporal things was this day mingled with the spiritual. All may see the evil now, and may God amend it. (3187-3496.)

I have said, my son, how Charity may help a man in both worlds; therefore, if thou wouldest avoid Envy, acquaint thyself with Charity, which is the sovereign virtue.
My father, I shall ever eschew Envy the more for this tale which ye have told, and I pray you to give me my penance for that which I have done amiss, and to ask me further.

I will tell thee, my son, of the vice which stands next after this. (3497-3530.)

Lib. III.
There is a vice which is the enemy to Patience and doth no pleasure to nature. This is one of the fatal Seven and is called lRe, which in English is Wrath.

25-416. He has five servants to help him, of whom the first is Melancholy, which lours like an angry beast and none knows the reason why. Hast thou been so, my son?

Yea, father, I may not excuse myself therof, and love is the cause of it. My heart is ever hot and I burn with wrath, angered with myself because I cannot speed. Waking I dream that I meet with my lady and pray her for an answer to my suit, and she, who will not gladly swear, saith me nay without an oath, wherewith I am so distempered that I almost lose my wits; and when I think how long I have served and how I am refused, I am angry for the smallest thing, and every servant in my house is afraid of me until the fit passes. If I approach my lady and she speaks a fair word to me, all my anger is gone ; but if she will not look upon me, I return again to my former state. Thus I hurt my hand against the prick and make a whip for my own self; and all this springs from Melancholy. I pray you, my father, teach me some example whereby I may appease myself.

My son, I will fulfil thy prayer. (25-142.)
Canace and Machaire. There was a king called Eolus, and he had two children, a son Machaire and a daughter Canace. These two grew up together in one chamber, and love made them blind, so that they followed only the law of nature and saw not that of reason. As the bird which sees the food but not the net, so they saw not the peril. At length Canace was with child and her brother fled. The child was born and the truth could not be hid. The father came into her chamber in a frenzy of wrath, and she in vain entreated for mercy. He sent a knight to her with a sword, that she might slay herself; but first she wrote a letter to her brother, while her child lay weeping in her breast. Then she set the pommel of the sword to ground and pierced her heart with the point. The king bade them take the child and cast it out for wild beasts to devour. Little did he know of love who wrought such a cruel deed. (143-336.)
Therefore, my son, have regard to love, and remember that no man's might can resist what Nature has ordained. Otherwise vengeance may fall, as in a tale that I will tell. (337-360.)

Tiresias saw two snakes coupled together and smote them with his staff. Thereupon, as he had disturbed nature, so he was transformed against nature into a woman. ( $36 \mathrm{I}-380$.)
Thus wrote Ovid, and thus we see that we ought not to be wroth against the law of nature in men. There may be vice in love, but there is no malice.

My father, all this is true. Let every man love whom he will ; I shall not be wroth, if it be not my lady. I am angry only with myself, because I can find no remedy for my evils. (381-416.)

417-842. Cheste. The second kind of Wrath is Cheste, which has his mouth ever unlocked and utters evil sayings of every one. Men are more afraid of him than of thunder and exclaim against his evil tongue. Tell me, my son, if thou hast ever chid toward thy love.

Nay, father, never: I call my lady herself to witness. I never dared speak to her any but good words. I may have said at times more than I ought, the best plowman balks sometimes, and I have often spoken contrary to her command; but she knows well that I do not chide. Men may pray to God, and he will not be wroth; and my lady, being but a woman, ought not to be angry if I tell her of my griefs. Often indeed I chide with myself, because I have not said that which I ought, but this avails me nothing. Now ye have heard all, therefore give me absolution.
My son, if thou knewest all the evils of Cheste in love, thou wouldest learn to avoid it. Fair speech is most accordant to love ; therefore keep thy tongue carefully and practise Patience.

My father, tell me some example of this. (417-638.)
Patience of Socrates. A man should endure as Socrates did, who to try his own patience married a scolding wife. She came in on a winter day from the well and saw her husband reading by the fire. Not being able to draw an answer to her reproaches, she emptied the water-pot over his head: but he said only that rain in the course of nature followed wind, and drew nearer to the fire to dry his clothes. (639-698.)
I know not if this be reasonable, but such a man ought truly to be called patient by judgement of Love's Court.
Here again is a tale by which thou mayest learn to restrain thy tongue. (699-730.)
Jupiter, Juno and Tiresias. Jupiter and Juno fell out upon the question whether man or wife is the more ardent in love, and they made Tiresias judge. He speaking unadvisedly gave judgement against Juno, who deprived him of his sight. Jupiter in compensation gave him the gift of prophecy, but he would rather have had the sight of his eyes. Therefore beware, and keep thy tongue close. (731-782.)
Phebus and Cornide. Phebus loved Cornide, but a young knight visited her in her chamber. This was told to Phebus by a bird which she kept, and he in anger slew Cornide. Then he repented, and as a punishment he changed the bird's feathers from white to black. (783-817.)
Jupiter and Laar. The nymph Laar told tales of Jupiter to Juno, and he cut off her tongue and sent her down to hell. There are many such now in Love's Court, who let their tongues go loose. Be not thou one of these, my son, and above all avoid Cheste.

My father, I will do so: but now tell me more of Wrath. (818-842.)
843-1088. Hate is the next, own brother to Cheste. Art thou guilty of this?

I know not as yet what it is, except ye teach me.
Listen then : Hate is a secret Wrath, gathering slowly and dwelling in the heart, till he see time to break forth.

Father, I will not swear that I have been guiltless of this; for though I never hated my lady, I have hated her words. Moreover I hate those envious janglers who hinder me with their lies, and 1 pray that they may find themselves in the same condition as I am. Then I would stand in their way, as they stand in mine, and they would know how grievous a thing it is to be hindered in love.

Myson, I cannot be content that thou shouldest hate any man, even though he have hindered thee. But I counsel thee to beware of other men's hate, for it is often disguised under a fair appearance, as the Greeks found to their cost. (843-972.)

King Namplus and the Greeks. After the fall of Troy the Greeks, voyaging home, were overtaken by a storm and knew not how to save their ships. Now there was a king, Namplus, who hated the Greeks because of his son Palamades, whom they had done to death, and he lighted fires to lure their ships towards his rocky coast. They supposed that the fires were beacons to guide them into haven, and many of their ships ran on the rocks. The rest, warned by the cry of those that perished, put forth again to sea.
By this, my son, thou mayest know how Fraud joins with Hate to overthrow men. (973-1088.)

1089-2621. Contek and Homicide. Two more remain, namely Contek, who has Foolhaste for his chamberlain, and Homicide. These always in their wrath desire to shed blood, and they will not hear of pity. Art thou guilty of this, my son?
Nay, my father, Christ forbid. Yet as regards love, about which is our shrift, I confess that I have Contek in my heart, Wit and Reason opposing Will and Hope. Reason says that I ought to cease from my love, but Will encourages me in it, and he it is who rules me.
Thou dost wrong, my son, for Will should ever be ruled by Reason, whereof I find a tale written. (1089-1200.)
Diogenes and Alexander. There was a philosopher named Diogenes, who in his old age devised a tun, in which he sat and observed the heavens. King Alexander rode by with his company and sent a knight to find out what this might be. The knight questioned Diogenes, but he could get no answer. 'It is thy king who asks,' said the knight in anger. 'No, not my king,' said the philosopher. 'What then, is he thy man?' 'Nay, but rather my man's man.' The knight told the king, who rode himself to see. 'Father,' he said, 'tell me how I am thy man's man.' Diogenes replied, 'Because I have always kept Will in subjection to me, but with thee Will is master and causes thee to sin.' The king offered to give him whatsoever he should ask. He replied, 'Stand thou out of my sunshine: I need no other gift from thee.'

From this thou mayest learn, my son ; for thou hast said that thy will is thy master, and hence thou hast Contek in thine heart, and this, since love is blind, may even breed Homicide. (1201-1330.)

Pyramus and Thisbe. In the city of Semiramis there dwelt two lords in neighbouring houses, and the one had a son named Piramus, and the other a daughter, Tisbee. These loved each other, and when two are of one accord in love, no man can hinder their purpose. They made a hole in the wall between them and conversed through this, till at length they planned to meet near a spring without the town. The maiden was there first; but a lion came to drink at the spring with snout all bloody from a slain beast, and she fled away, leaving her wimple on the ground. This the lion tore and stained with blood, while she lay hid in a bush, not daring to move. Piramus came soon and supposed she had been slain. Reproaching himself as the cause of her death, he slew himself with his sword in his foolhaste. Tisbee came then and found him dead, and she called upon the god and goddess of love, who had so cruelly served those who were obedient to their law. At last her sorrow overcame her, so that she knew not what she did. She set the sword's point to her heart and fell upon it, and thus both were found lying. (1331-1494.)

Beware by this tale that thou bring not evil on thyself by foolhaste.
My father, I will not hide from you that I have often wished to die, though I have not been guilty of the deed. But I know by whose counsel it is that my lady rejects me, and him I would slay if I had him in my power.

Who is this mortal enemy, my son?
His name is Danger, and he may well be called 'sanz pite.' It is he who hinders me in all things and will not let my lady receive my suit. He is ever with her and gives an evil answer to all my prayers. Thus I hate him and desire that he should be slain. But as to my lady, I muse at times whether she will be acquitted of homicide, if I die for her love, when with one word she might have saved me.
My son, refrain thine heart from Wrath, for Wrath causes a man to fail of love. Men must go slowly on rough roads and consider before they climb : 'rape reweth,' as the proverb says, and it is better to cast water on the fire than burn up the house. Be patient, my son: the mouse cannot fight with the cat, and whoso makes war on love will have the worse. Love demands peace, and he who fights most will conquer least. Hasten not to thy sorrow : he has not lost who waits.

Thou mayest take example by Piramus, who slew himself so foolishly. Do nothing in such haste, for suffrance is the well of peace. Hasten not the Court of Love, in which thou hast thy suit. Foolhaste often sets a man behind, and of this I have an example. (1495-1684.)

Phebus and Daphne. Phebus laid his love on Daphne and followed his suit with foolish haste. She ever said him nay, and at length Cupid, seeing the haste of Phebus, said that he should hasten more and yet not speed. He pierced his heart therefore with a golden dart of fire, and that of Daphne with a dart of lead. Thus the more Phebus pursued, the more she fled away, and at length she was changed into a laurel tree, which is ever green, in token that she remained ever a maid. Thus thou mayest understand that it is vain to hasten love, when fortune is against it.

Thanks, father, for this: but so long as I see that my lady is no tree, I will serve her, however fortune may turn.

I say no more, my son, but think how it was with Phebus and beware. A man should take good counsel always, for counsel puts foolluaste away.

Tell me an example, I pray you. (1685-1756.)
Athemas and Demephon. When Troy was taken and the Greeks returned home, many kings found their people unwilling to receive them. Among these were Athemas and Demephon, who gathered a host to avenge themselves and said they would spare neither man, woman, nor child. Nestor however, who was old and wise, asked them to what purpose they would reign as kings, if their people should be destroyed, and bade them rather win by fair speech than by threats. Thus the war was turned to peace: for the nations, seeing the power which the kings had gathered, sent and entreated them to lay aside their wrath. (1757-1856.)

By this example refrain thine heart, my son, and do nothing by violence which may be done by love. As touching Homicide, it often happens unadvisedly through Will, when Reason is away, and great vengeance has sometimes followed. Whereof I shall tell a tale which it is pity to hear. (1857-1884.)

Orestes. Agamenon, having returned from Troy, was slain by his wife Climestre and her lover Egistus. Horestes, his infant son, was saved and delivered into the keeping of the king of Crete. When he grew up, he resolved to avenge his father, and coming to Athens gathered a power there with the help of the duke. When he offered sacrifice in a temple for his success, the god gave him command to slay his mother, tearing away her breasts with his own hands and giving her body to be devoured. He rode to Micene and took the city by siege : then he sent for his mother and did as the oracle had commanded. Egistus, coming to the rescue of Micene, was caught in an ambush and hanged as a traitor.

Fame spread these deeds abroad, and many blamed Horestes for slaying his mother. The lords met at Athens and sent for him to come and answer for his deed. He told how the gods had laid a charge upon him to execute judgement, as he had done, and Menesteus, a duke and worthy knight, spoke for him and championed his cause. They concluded upon this that since she had committed so foul an adultery and murder, she had deserved the punishment, and Horestes was crowned king of Micene. Egiona, daughter of Egistus and Climestre, who had consented to the murder of Agamenon, hanged herself for sorrow that her brother had been acquitted. Such is the vengeance for murder. (1885-2195.)

My father, I pray you tell me if it is possible without sin to slay a man.

Yea, my son, in sundry wise. The judge commits sin if he spares to slay those who deserve death by the law. Moreover a man may defend his house and his land in war, and slay if no better may be.
I beseech you, father, to tell me whether those that seek war in a worldly cause, and shed blood, do well. (2196-2250.)

War. God has forbidden homicide, and when God's Son was born, his angels proclaimed peace to the men of good will. Therefore by the law of charity there should be no war, and nature also commends peace. War consorts with pestilence and famine and brings every kind of evil upon the earth. I know not what reward he deserves who brings in such things ; and if he do it to gain heaven's grace, he shall surely fail. Since wars are so evil in God's sight, it is a marvel what ails men that they cannot establish peace. Sin, I trow, is the cause, and the wages of $\sin$ is death. Covetousness first brought in war, and among the Greeks Arcadia alone was free from war, because it was barren and poor. Yet it is a wonder that a worthy king or lord will claim that to which he has no right. Nature and law both are against it, but Wit is here oppressed by Will, and some cause is feigned to deceive the world. Thou mayest take an example of this, how men excuse their wrong-doing, and how the poor and the rich are alike in the lust for gain. (2251-2362.)

Alexander and the Pirate. A sea-rover was brought before Alexander and accused of his misdeeds. He replied, 'I have a heart like thine, and if I had the power, I would do as thou dost. But since I am the leader of a few men only, I am called a thief, while thou with thy great armies art called an Emperor. Rich and poor are not weighed evenly in the balance.' The king approved his boldness and retained him in his service. (2363-2417.)

Thus they who are set on destruction are all of one accord, captain and company alike. When reason is put aside, man follows rapine like a bird of prey, and all the world may not suffice for his desires. Alexander overran the whole earth and died miserably, when he thought himself most secure. Lo, what profit it is to slay men for covetousness, as if they were beasts. Beware, my son, of slaying. (2418-2484.)

Is it lawful, my father, to pass over the sea to war against the Saracen?

My son, Christ bade men preach and suffer for the faith. He made all men free by his own death, and his apostles after him preached and suffered death : but if they had wished to spread the faith by the sword, it would never have prevailed. We see that since the time when the Church took the sword in hand, a great part of that which was won has been lost to Christ's faith. Be well advised then always ere thou slay. Homicide stands now even in the Church itself; and when the well of pity is thus defouled with blood, others do not hesitate to make war and to slay. We see murder now upon the earth as in the days when men bought and sold sins.

In Greece before Christ's faith men were dispensed of the guilt of murder by paying gold: so it was with Peleus, Medea, Almeus, and so it is still. But after this life it shall be known how it fares with those who do such things. Beasts do not prey upon their own kind, and it is not reasonable that man should be worse than a beast.

Solinus tells a tale of a bird with man's face, which dies of sorrow when it has slain a man. By this example men should eschew homicide and follow mercy. (2485-262 F .)

I have heard examples of this virtue of MERCY among those who followed the wars. Remember, my son, that this virtue brings grace, and that they who are most mighty to hurt should be the most ready to relieve. (2622-2638.)

Telaphus and Theucer. Achilles and his son Telaphus made war on Theucer, king of Mese. Achilles was about to slay the king in the battle, but Telaphus interceded for him, saying that Theucer once did him good service. Thus the king's life was spared but the Greeks won the victory. Theucer, grateful for this and for other service before rendered by Achilles, made Telaphus heir to all his land, and thus was mercy rewarded. (2639-2717.)

Take pity therefore, my son, of other men's suffering, and let nothing be a pleasure to thee which is grief to another. Stand against Ire by the counsel of Patience and take Mercy to be the governor of thy conscience : so shalt thou put away all homicide and hate, and so shalt thou the sooner have thy will of love.
Father, I will do your hests; and now give me my penance for Wrath, and ask further of my life.
My son, I will do so. Art thou then guilty of Sloth ?
My father, I would know first the points which belong to it.
Hearken then, and I will set them forth: and bear well in mind that shrift is of no value to him that will not endeavour to leave his vice. (2718-2774.)

Lib. IV.
1-312. Lachesce is the first point of Sloth, and his nature is to put off till to-morrow what he ought to do to-day. Hast thou done so in love?

Yes, my father, I confess I am guilty. When I have set a time to speak to that sweet maid, Lachesce has often told me that another time is better, or has bidden me write instead of speaking by mouth. Thus I have let the time slide for Sloth, until it was too late. But my love is always the same, and though my tongue be slow to ask, my heart is ever entreating favour. I pray you tell me some tale to teach me how to put away Lachesce. ( $1-76$.)

Eneas and Dido. When Eneas came with his navy to Carthage, he won the love of the queen Dido, who laid all her heart on him. Thence he went away toward Ytaile; and she, unable to endure the pain of love, wrote him a letter saying that if he came not again, it would be with her as with the swan that lost her mate, she should die for his sake. But he, being slothful in love, tarried still away, and she bitterly complaining of his delay, thrust a sword through her heart and thus got rest for herself. (77-146.)

Ulysses and Penelope. Again, when Ulixes stayed away so long at Troy, his true wife Penolope wrote him a letter complaining of his Lachesce. So he set himself to return home with all speed as soon as 'Troy was taken. (147-233.)

Grossteste. The great clerk Grossteste laboured for seven years to make a speaking head of brass, and then by one half-minute of Lachesce he lost all his labour. (234-243.)

It fares so sometimes with the lover who does not keep his time. Let him think of the five maidens whose lamps were not lit when the bridegroom came forth, and how they were shut out.

My father, I never had any time or place appointed me to get any grace : otherwise I would have kept my hour. But she will not alight on any lure that I may cast, and the louder I cry, the less she hears.

Go on so, my son, and let no Lachesce be found in thee. (244-312.)
313-538. Pusillanimity means in our language the lack of heart to undertake man's work. This vice is ever afraid when there is no cause of dread. So as regards love there are truants that dare not speak, who are like bells without clappers and do not ask anything.

I an one of those, my father, in the presence of my lady.
Do no more so, my son, for fortune comes to him who makes continuance in his prayers. (313-370.)

Pygmaleon. There was one named Pymaleon, a sculptor of great skill, who made an image of a woman in ivory, fairer than any living creature. On this he set his love and prayed her ever for a return, as though she understood what he said. At length Venus had pity on him and transformed the image into a woman of flesh and blood. Thus he won his wife ; but if he had not spoken, he would have failed. By this example thou mayest learn that word may work above nature, and that the god of love is favourable to those who are steadfast in love. About which also I read a strange tale. (371-450.)

Iphis. King Ligdus told his wife that if her child about to be born should be a daughter, it must be put to death. A daughter was born, whom lsis the goddess of childbirth bade bring up as a boy. So they named him Iphis, and when he was ten years old he was betrothed to Iante. Cupid took pity on them at last for the love that they had to one another, and changed Iphis into a man. (451-505.)

Thus love has goodwill towards those who pursue steadfastly that which to love is due.
My father, I have not failed for lack of prayer, except so far as I said above. I beseech Love day and night to work his miracle for me. (506-538.)

539-886. Forgetrulness. There is yet another who serves Accidie, and that is Foryetelness. He forgets always more than the half of that which he has to say to his love.

So it has often been with me, father: I am so sore afraid in her presence that I am as one who has seen a ghost, and I cannot get my wits for fear, but stand, as it were, dumb and deaf. Then afterwards I lament and ask myself why I was afraid, for there is no more violence in her than in a child of three years old. Thus I complain to myself of my forgetfulness; but 1 never forget the thought of her, nor should do, though I had the Ring of Oblivion, which Moses made for Tharbis. She is near my heart always, and when I am with her, I am so ravished with the sight of her, that I forget all the words that I ought to speak. Thus it is with me as regards forgetfulness and lack of heart.
My son, love will not send his grace unless we ask it. God knows a man's thought and yet he wills that we should pray. Therefore pull up a busy heart and let no chance escape thee; and as touching Foryetelness I find a tale written. (539-730.)
Demophon and Phylis. King Demephon, as he sailed to Troy, came to Rhodopeie, of which land Phillis was queen. He plighted his troth to her, and she granted him all that he would have. Then came the time that he should sail on to Troy, but he vowed to return to her within a month. The month passed and he forgot his time. She sent him a letter, setting him a day, and saying that if he came not, his sloth would cause her death. She watched and waited, putting up a lantern in a tower by night, but he did not return. Then when the day came and no sail appeared, she ran down from the tower to an arbour where she was alone, and hanged herself upon a bough with a girdle of silk. The gods shaped her into a tree, which men called after her Philliberd, and this name it has still to the shame of Demephon, who repented, but all too late. Thus none can guess the evil that comes through Foryetelness. (731-886.)

887-1082. Negligence is he who will not be wise beforehand, and afterwards exclaims, 'Would God I had known!' He makes the stable-door fast after the steed is stolen. If thou art so in love, thou wilt not achieve success.

My father, I may with good conscience excuse myself of this. I labour to learn love's craft, but I cannot find any security therein. My will is not at fault, for I am busy night and day to find out how love may be won.

I am glad, my son, that thou canst acquit thyself of this, for there is no science and no virtue that may not be lost by Negligence. (887-978.)

Phaeton. Phebus had a son named Pheton, who, conspiring with his mother Clemenee, got leave to drive the chariot of the Sun. Phebus advised him how he should do, and that he should drive neither too low nor too high. But he through Negligence let the horses draw the car where they would, and at last the world was set on fire. Phebus then caused him to fall from the car, and he was drowned in a river. (979-1034.)

Icarus. As in high estate it is a vice to go too low, so in low estate it does harm to go too high. Dedalus had a son named Icharus, and they were in prison with Minotaurus and could not escape. This Dedalus then fashioned wings for himself and his son, and he warned his son not to fly too high, lest the wax with which his wings were set on should melt with the sun. Icharus neglected his father's warning and fell to his destruction : and so do some others. (1035-1082.)

1083-2700. Idleness is another of the brood of Sloth and is the nurse of every vice. In summer he will not work for the heat and in winter for the cold. He will take no travail for his lady's sake, but is as a cat that would eat fish and yet not wet his claws. Art thou of such a mould? Tell me plainly.

Nay, father, towards love I was never idle.
What hast thou done then, my son?
In every place where my lady is, I have been ready to serve her, whether in chamber or in hall. When she goes to mass, I lead her up to the offering; when she works at her weaving or embroidery, I stand by, and sometimes I tell tales or sing. When she will not stay with me, but busies herself elsewhere, I play with the dog or the birds and talk to the page or the waiting-maid, to make an excuse for my lingering. If she will ride, 1 lift her into the saddle and go by her side, and at other times I ride by her carriage and speak with her, or sing. Tell me then if I have any guilt of Idleness.

Thou shalt have no penance here, my son; but nevertheless there are many who will not trouble themselves to know what love is, until he overcome them by force. Thus a king's daughter once was idle, until the god of love chastised her, as thou shalt hear. (1083-1244.)
Rosiphelee, daughter of Herupus, king of Armenie, was wise and fair, but she had one great fault of sloth, desiring neither marriage nor the love of paramours. Therefore Venus and Cupid made a rod for her chastising, so that her mood at length was changed. She walked forth once in the month of May, and staying alone under the trees near a lawn, she heard the birds sing and saw the hart and the hind go together, and a debate arose within her as to love. Then casting her eyes about, she saw a company of ladies riding upon white horses. They had saddles richly adorned and were clothed in the fairest copes and kirtles, all alike of white and blue. Their beauty was beyond that of earthly things, and they wore crowns upon their heads such that all the gold of Cresus could not have purchased the least of them.

The king's daughter drew back abashed and hid herself to let them pass, not daring to ask who they were. Then after them she saw a woman on a black horse, lean, galled and limping, yet with a richly jewelled bridle. The woman, though fair and young, had her clothing torn and many score of halters hanging about her middle. The princess came forth and asked her what this company might be, and she said these were they who had been true servants to love, but she herself had been slow and unwilling; and therefore each year in the month of May she must needs ride in this manner and bear halters for.the rest. Her jewelled bridle was granted her because at last she had yielded to love, but death came upon her too suddenly. 'I commend you to God, lady,' she said, ' and bid you warn all others for my sake not to be idle in love, but to think upon my bridle.' Thus she passed out of sight like a cloud, and the lady was moved with fear and amended her ways, swearing within her heart that she would bear no halters. (1245-1446.)

Understand then, my son, that as this lady was chastised, so should those knights take heed who are idle towards love, lest they deserve even a greater punishment. Maidens too must follow the law of love and not waste that time during which they might be bearing the charge of children for the service of the world. And about this I think to tell them a tale. ( $1447-1$ 504.)
Jephthak's daughter. Among the Jews there was a duke named Jepte, who going to war against Amon, made a vow that if victory were granted to him, he would sacrifice to God the first who should meet him on his return. He overcame his foes and returning met his daughter, who came forth to welcome him with songs and dances. When she saw his sorrow and heard the vow that he had made, she bade him keep his covenant, and asked only for a respite of forty days to bewail her maidenhead, in that she had brought forth no children for the increase of her people. So with other maidens she went weeping over the downs and the dales, and mourned for the lost time which she never could now redeem. (1505 I 595)

Father, ye have done well to rebuke maidens for this vice of Sloth but as to the travail which ye say men ought to take for love, what mean ye by this?

I was thinking, my son, of the deeds of arms that men did in former times fur love's sake. He who seeks grace in love must not spare his travall. He must nde sometimes in Pruce and sometimes in Tartary; so that the heralds may cry after him, 'Valuant, Valiant!' and his fame may come to his lady's ear. This is the thing 1 mean. Confess, if thou hast been idle in this, (1596-1647.)
l'ea, my father, and ever was. I know not what good may cone of slaying the heathen, and 1 should bave little gain from passing over the sea, if in the meantime I lost my lady at home. Let them pass the sea whom Christ commanded to preach his fath to all the world; but now they sit at ease and bid us slay those whom they should convert. If I stiy a Saracen, I slay body and soul both, and that was never Clirist's lore.

As for me, I will sene love, and go or stay as love bids me. 1 have heard that Achilles left his arms at Troy for love of Polixenen, and so may 1 do: but if my lady bade me labour for her, I would pass throagh shy or sea at her command. Nevertheless I see that those who labour most for love, win often the least reward, and though I have never been idle in deed, yet the effect is always idleness, for my business avals me nothing, Therefore idle 1 will call myself.

My son, be patient. Thou knowest not what chance may fall. It is better to wast on the tide than to row aganst the streatn. Perchance the revolution of the heavens is not yet in accord wilh thy condition. I can bear witness to Venus that thou hast not been idle in lose; but since thou art slow to travail in arms and mahest an argument of Achilles, 1 will tell thee a tale to the contrary. ( 1648 I814.)

Natuplus and Ulysses. King Nauplus, father of Palamades, came to persuade Ulixes to go with the Greeks to Troy. He, however, desired to stay at home with his wife, and feigning madness he yoked foxes 10 his plough and sowed the lind with salt. Nauplus saw the cause and laid the infunt son of Uloxes before his plough. The father turned the plough aside, and Nauplus rebuked him for thus unworthily forsaking the honour of arms and for setting love before knighthood. He repented of has folly and went forth with them to Troy. ( 1815 -ISgi.)

Thus a knght must prefer honour to worldly ease and put away all dread, as did /'roihesidai, whose wife wrote to him that he shousd lose hus life if he linded at Troy; and be took no beed of her womanish fears, but was the first to land, choosing rather to dee with honour than to live reproved. (1892-1934.)

Saul too, when the spirit of Samuel sold bim that he should be slain in battle, would not draw back from the danger, but with Jonathas his son he met his enemies on the mountains of Gelboe, and won eternal fame. (1935-1962.)
Education of Achilles. Prowess is founded upon hardihood, and we know how Achilles was brought up to this by Chiro, called Centaurus. He was taught not to make his chase after the beasts that fled from him, but to fight with such as would withstand him. Moreover a covenant was set that every day he should slay, or at least wound, some savage beast, as a lion or a tiger, and bring home with him a token of blood upon his weapon. Thus he came to surpass all other knights. (1963-2013.)

Other examples there are, as of Lancelot and many more, which show how Prowess in arms has led to success in love. Let this tale be witness of it. (2014-2044.)

Hercules and Achelons. King Oënes of Calidoyne had a daughter Deianire, who was promised in marriage to Achelons, a giant and a magician. Hercules, that worthy knight who set up the two pillars of brass in the desert of India, sought her love, and the king dared-not refuse him. It was ordained then that combat should decide between them. Achelons, stirred up to prowess by love, fought boldly, but Hercules seized him with irresistible strength. Then Achelons tried his craft, changing himself into a snake first and then a bull. Hercules, however, held him by the horns and forced him down, till at length he was overcome. Thus Hercules won his wife by prowess. (2045-2134.)

So Pantasilee, queen of Feminee, for love of Hector did deeds of prowess at Troy; and Philemenis, because he brought home the body of Pantasilee and saved some of her maidens, had a tribute granted to him of three maidens yearly from the land of Amazoine. Eneas also won Lavine in battle against king Turnus. By these examples thou mayest see how love's grace may be gained, for worthy women love manhood and gentilesse. (2135-2199.)

What is Gentilesse, my father?
Some set that name upon riches coming down from old time, but there is no true merit in riches; and as for lineage, all are descended from Adam and Eve. Rich and poor are alike in their birth and in their death ; the true gentilesse depends upon virtue, and for virtue love may profit much. Especially love is opposed to Sloth, and Sloth is most of all contrary to the nature of man, for by it all knowledge is lost. (2200-2362.)

By Labour it was that all useful arts were found out, and the names of many inventors have been handed down by fame, as Cham, Cadmus, Theges, Termegis, Josephus, Heredot, Jubal, Zenzis, Promotheus, Tubal, Jadahel, Verconius, and among women Minerve and Delbora. Saturnus found out agriculture and trade, and he first coined money. (2363-2450.)

Many philosophers have cortrived the getting and refining of metals and the science of Alconomie, by which gold and silver are multiplied, with the working of the seven bodies and the four spirits for the finding of the perfect Elixir.

The philosophers of old made three Stones : the Vegetable, by which life and health are preserved, the Animal, by which the five senses are helped in their working, and the Mineral, by which metals are transformed. This science is a true one, but men know not how to follow it rightly, so that it brings in only poverty and debt. They who first founded it have great names, as Hermes, Geber, Ortolan and others. (2451-2632.)
With regard to Language, Carmente was the first who invented the Latin letters, and then came those who laid down the rules of rhetoric, as Aristarchus, Dindimus, Tullius and Cithero. Jerome translated the Bible from Hebrew, and others also translated books into Latin from Arabic and Greek. In poetry Ovid wrote for lovers, and taught how love should be cooled, if it were too hot.

My father, I would read his books, if they might avail me ; but as a tree would perish if its roots were cut away, so if my love were withdrawn, my heart would die.

That is well said, my son, if there be any way by which love may be achieved; and assuredly he who will not labour and dares not venture will attain to nothing. (2633-2700.)

2701-3388. Somnolence. The chamberlain of Sloth is Somnolence, who sleeps when he should be awake. When knights and ladies revel in company, he skulks away like a hare and lays himself down to rest ; and there he dreams and snores, and when he wakes, he expounds his dreams. If thou wilt serve love, my son, do not thou so.

Surely not, father; it were better for me to die than to have such sluggardy, or rather it were better I had never been born. I have never been sleepy in the place where my lady was, whether I should dance with her, or cast the dice, or read of Troilus. When it is late and I must needs go, I look piteously upon her and take leave upon my knee, or kiss her if I may; and then before I depart from the house, I feign some cause to return and take leave of her again. Then afterwards I curse the night for driving me away from her company, and I sigh and wish for day, or think of the happiness of those who have their love by their side all the long night through. At last I go to bed, but my heart remains still with her: no lock may shut him out, and he passes through the strongest wall. He goes into her bed and takes her softly in his arms, and wishes that his body also were there. In my dreams again I suffer the torments of love, or if I dream sometimes that I meet her alone and that Danger has bcen left behind, I wake only to find all in vain.

My son, in past times many dreams have told of truth, as thou mayest know by a tale. (2701-2926.)

Ceix and Alceone. Ceix, king of Trocinie, went on a pilgrimage for the sake of his brother Dedalion, and left at home Alceone his wife. She besought him to fix the time of his return, and he said 'Within two months.' The time passed and she heard no tidings, and Juno, to whom she prayed, sent Yris to the house of Sleep, bidding him show this lady by dream how the matter was.

Yris bent the heaven like a bow and came down, and she went to the place where Sleep had his dwelling, in a cave where no sun ever shone and no sound could be heard but the murmur of the river Lethes, which ran hard by. He himself was sleeping in a chamber strewn up and down with dreams, and long it was ere her words could pierce his ears. When he at length understood the message, he chose out three, Morpheus, Ithecus and Panthasas, to do this deed. Morpheus appeared to Alceone in the form of her husband lying dead upon the shore, while the other two showed her in action the scene of the tempest and the wreck. She cried out in terror and awoke, and on the morrow, going down to the sea, she saw his body floating on the waves. Careless of death she leapt into the deep, and would have caught him in her arms; but the gods pitied them and changed them into birds of the sea, and so they dwelt together lovingly. (2927-3123.)

Thus dreams prove sometimes true.
Father, I have said that when I am in my lady's company, I do not desire to sleep. But at other times I care little to wake, for I cannot endure to be in company without her. I know not if this be Somnolence.

I acquit thee, my son, and I will tell a tale to show how little love and sleep are in accord. (3124-3186.)

Prayer of Cephalus. He who will wake by night for love may take example by Cephalus, who when he lay with Aurora prayed to the Sun and to the Moon that the night might be made longer and the day delayed, in order that he might follow only the law of love. Sloth cares nothing for the night except that he may sleep, but Cephalus did otherwise. (3187-3275.)

My father, that is no wonder, since he had his love by his side. But this is never my case, so I have never need to entreat the Sun to stay his chariot, or the Moon to lengthen her course. Sometimes I have a dream that makes me glad, but afterwards I find it untrue: so that I know not of what use sleep is to man.

True, my son, except that it helps nature, when it is taken in due measure. But he who sleeps unduly may come by misfortune, as I can show by a tale. (3276-3316.)

Argus and Mercury. Jupiter lay by Io, wherefore Juno changed her into a cow and gave her into the keeping of Argus, who had a hundred eyes. Mercury came to steal the cow, and he piped so cunningly that Argus fell asleep. So Mercury smote off his head and took away lo. Therefore, my son, beware thou sleep not overmuch. (3317-3364.)

Love will not let me do so, father: but ask further, if there be more.
Yea, my son, one there is to tell of still. (3365-3388.)
3389-3692. Tristesce. When Sloth has done all that he may, he conceives Tristesce, which drives him to utter wretchedness. With Tristesce is Obstinacy, and despair follows them. So it is with some lovers, who lose all hope.

I am one of these, father, except that I do not cease to pray.
My son, do not despair ; for when the heart fails, all is lost. Listen to a tale about this. (3389-3514.)

Iphis and Araxarathen. Iphis, son of king Theucer, loved a maid of low estate. Though a prince, he was subject to love, but she would not listen to his suit. At length being brought to despair, he came before her house in the night, and having bewailed his case and lamented her hardness of heart, he hanged himself upon the post of the gate. On the morrow the maiden took the guilt upon herself, and prayed that no pity might be shown to her, as she had shown no pity to him. The gods took away her life and changed her into stone; and men carried the body of Iphis to the city and set up the stone image of the maiden above his tomb, with an epitaph telling of their fate. (3515-3684.)

Thus, my son, despair, as I say, is a grievous thing.
Father, I understand now the nature of Sloth, and I will take heed.

Lib. V.

Avarice is the root of all strife among men. He ever gets more and more and lets nothing go, and yet he has never enough. He has no profit from his riches any more than an ox from his ploughing or a sheep from his wool : instead of being master of his wealth, he serves it as a slave. Dost thou fare so in love, my son?
No, my father, for I was never in possession; but I cannot here excuse my will, for if I had my lady, I would never let her go; and herein I am like the avaricious man. Moreover, though I have not the wealth, yet I have the care, and am like that ox of which ye told before. Judge if this be Avarice.

My son, it is no wonder if thou art a slave to love; but to be a slave to gold is against nature and reason. ( $1-140$.)

Midas. Bacchus had a priest named Cillenus, and he being drunk and wandering in Frige was brought in bonds before Mide, the king of that land. This king dealt with him courteously, and Bacchus in reward of this bade him ask what worldly thing he would. He debated long within himself between three things, pleasure, power and wealth ; and at length he asked that all things might be turned by his touch to gold. The boon granted, he tried his power on stone and leaf, but when he at length sat down to meat, then he saw the folly of Avarice, and prayed Bacchus to take back his gift. The god took pity and bade him bathe in Paceole, and so he recovered his first estate; but the stones in the bed of the river were changed to gold. He went home and put away his Avarice, and taught his people to till the land and breed cattle rather than seek increase of gold. (141-332.)
Before gold was coined, war and usury were unknown, but now through Avarice all the world is out of joint. When thou seest a man have need, give him of thy substance, for the pain of Tantalus awaits those who will not give : they stand in a river up to their chin and yet cannot drink, and fruit hangs over and touches their lips, of which they cannot eat. Thus Avarice hungers ever after more, though he has enough, and gets no good from that which he has. If thou desirest to be beloved, thou must use largess and give for thy love's sake: if thou wilt have grace, be gracious, and eschew the disease of Avarice. Some men have no rest for fear their gold should be stolen, and so some lovers cannot be at peace for Jealousy. (333-444.)

What is this Jealousy, my father?
It is like a fever, my son, which returns every day. It makes a man look after his lady wherever she goes, and if she make the least sign of countenance to another man, he turns it to a cause of quarrel. Nothing can please him that she does. If he goes from home, he leaves some one to report her doings, and finds fault where there is none. The wife who is married to such a man may well curse the day when the gold was laid upon the book. As the sick man has no appetite for food, so the jealous man has no appetite for love, and yet like the avaricious he is tormented with the fear of losing his treasure. Love hates nothing more than this fever of which I speak, and to show how grievous it is, I will tell thee an example. (445-634.)

Vulcan and Venus. Vulcan the smith had the fair Venus for his wife, whom Mars loved and was beloved again. Jealousy caused Vulcan to spy upon them, and he devised so by his craft that they were caught as they lay together and bound with chains. He called the gods to see, but was only rebuked for his pains. Hence earthly husbands may learn that by Jealousy they bring shame upon themselves. (635-725.)

This example, my father, is hard to understand. How can such things happen among the gods, when there is but one God who is Lord of all? How come such gods as these to have a place?

My son, such gods are received by the unwise in sundry places: 1 will tell thee how. (726-747.)

747-1970. The Religions of the World. There were four forms of belief before Christ was born.

The Chaldees worshipped the Sun, Moon and Stars and the Elements, which cannot be gods because they suffer change. (747-786.)

The Egyplians worshipped beasts, and also three gods and a goddess, of whom the goddess, Ysis, came from Greece and taught them tillage. (787-834.)

The Greeks deified the men who were their rulers or who became famous, as Saturnus king of Crete and Jupiter his son,-such was their folly. Of gods they had besides these Mars, Apollo, Mercury, Vulcan, Eolus, Neptune, Pan, Bacchus, Esculapius, Hercules, Pluto, and of goddesses Sibeles, Jıno, Minerva, Pallas, Ceres, Diana, Proserpine; also Satyrs, Nymphs and Manes,-it would be too long to tell the whole. (835-1373.)

Yes, father, but why have ye said nothing of the god and the goddess of love?

I have left it for shame, my son, because I am their priest, but since thou desirest it, I will tell thee. Venus was the daughter of Saturn, and she first taught that love should be common. She had children both by gods and men : she lay with her brother Jupiter and her son Cupid, and she first told women to sell their bodies. Therefore they called her the goddess of love and her son the god. (1374-1443.)

The Greeks took a god to help in whatsoever they had to do. Dindimus, king of the Bragmans, wrote to Alexander, blaming the Greek faith, and saying that they had a god for every member of their body, Minerva for the head, Mercury for the tongue, and so on. (14441496.)

Idol-worship came first through Cirophanes, who set up an image of his son, and after that Ninus made a statue of his father Belus, which he caused to be worshipped, and third came the statue of Apis or Serapis, who spoke to Alexander in the cave, when he came riding with Candalus. (1497-1590.)
Thus went the misbeliefs of Grece, of Egypt and of Chaldee. Then, as the book says, God chose a people for himself. Habraham taught his lineage to worship only the one true God, and after they had multiplied in Egypt, God delivered them wondrously by Moises and brought them into the land of promise. But when Christ was born, they failed and fell away; so that they now live out of God's grace, dispersed in sundry lands. (1591-1736.)

God sent his Son down from heaven to restore the loss which we suffered in Adam: so that original sin was the cause of man's honour at the last. By this faith only we can attain to Paradise once more, but faith is not enough without good deeds. Therefore be not deceived by Lollardy, which sets the true faith of Christ in doubt. (1737-1824.)

Christ wrought first and then taught, so that his words explained his deeds, but we in these days have the words alone. Our prelates are like that priest who turned away his eyes and let Anthenor steal the Palladion of Troy. Christ died for the faith, but they say that life is sweet, and they follow only their own ease. Therefore the ship of Peter is almost lost in the waves, and tares are sown among the corn. Gregory complains of the sloth of the prelacy, and asks how we shall appear beside the Apostles in the day of Judgement. We shall be like the man who hid his lord's besant and got no increase upon it. We are slow towards our spiritual work, but swift to Avarice, which, as the apostle says, is idolatry.
My father, for this which ye have said I shall take the better heed: but now tell me the branches of Avarice as well in love as otherwise. (1825-1970.)
1971-2858. Covertise. Avarice has many servants, and one of these is Coveitise, who is her principal purveyor and makes his gain in every place. He is as the pike who devours the smaller fishes: for him might is always right. I will tell thee a tale of the punishment of this vice. (1971-2030.)

Virgit's Mirror. Virgil made a mirror at Rome, wherein the motions of all enemies for thirty miles round might be seen. They of Carthage had war with Rome, and took counsel with the king of Puile how they might destroy this mirror. Crassus, the Roman Emperor, was above all things covetous. They sent therefore three philosophers to Rome with a great treasure of gold, which they buried in two places secretly. These men professed to the Emperor that by dreams they could discover ancient hoards of gold, and first one and then the other of these buried treasures was found. Then the third master announced a yet greater treasure, to be found by mining under the magic mirror. As they mined, they underset the supports of the mirror with timber, and on a certain night these three set fire to the timber and fled out of the city. So the mirror fell and was destroyed, and Hanybal slew so many of the Romans in a day, that he filled three bushels with their gold rings. The Romans punished their Emperor by pouring molten gold down his throat, so that his thirst for gold might be quenched. (2031-2224.)

Coveitise in a king or in those of his court is an evil thing, my son; but he who most covets often gains least, and Fortune stands for much as well in courts as elsewhere. (2225-2272.)

The Two Coffers. A king heard that his courtiers complained of unequal rewards for their service. He resolved to show them that the fault lay not with him, and he caused two coffers to be made in all respects alike, the one of which he filled with gold and jewels, and the other with straw and stones. He called before him those who had complained, and bade them choose. They chose the worthless coffer, and he proved to them by this, that if they were not advanced, their fortune only was to blame. (2273-2390.)

Like this is the story of the Two Beggars whom the Emperor Frederick heard disputing about riches, and for whom he prepared two pasties, one containing a capon and the other full of florins. (2391-2441.)

1xviii

 GOWER'S ENGLISH WORKSThus it is often with love: though thou covet, yet shalt thou not obtain more than fortune has allutted thee. Yet there are those that covet every woman whom they see, finding something to their lik.ng: in each. They can no more judge in matters of luve than a blind man can judge of colours.

My father, I had rather be as poor as Job than covet in stcha manner. There is one whom I would have, and no more. (24.42-35! ${ }^{2}$ )

There are some also who choose a woman not fur ber face nor jet for her virtue, but only for her riches.

Such am not I, father, I could love my lady no more than I do, if she were as rich as Candace or Pantasilee; and I thank no man is su covetous that he would not set his heart upon her more than upon guld. To one who knows what love is, my lady seems to have all the graces of nature, and she is also the mirror and example of gouliness. It were better to love her than to love one who has a milion of gold. I say not that she is poor, for she has enough of worltily goods; yet my heart has never been drawn to her but for pure love's sake.

It is well, my son, for no other love will last. Hear now an example of how coveituse prevalled over love. (2514-2642.)

The King and his Steward's Wife. There was a king of Pule, whom his physicians counselled to take a fuir young woman to his bed, and he bade his steward provide. The steward had a wife whom he had married for lucre and not for love, and he set his coveitise before his honour. Having received a hundred pounds from the king to procure him the woman, he brought at night his own wife, agamst her will. Before the morning be came and desured to take her away, but the king refused to let her go, and at length the steward was compeled to tell him who she was. The king threatened ham with death if he remained one day longer in the land, and afterwards the took the woman for his wife. (2643-2825.)

Beware, my son, of this, for it is a great evil when marriage is made for lucre.

Father, so think I, and yet riches may sometimes be a help to love. Now ask me more, if more there be. ( 2826.2858 .)

2859-4382. False Witness and Perjury. Coveitise has two counsellors, False Witness and Perjury, who make gatn for thear master by lying. So lovers often swear fathful service to a woman, and it is all treachery.

I am not one of these, father: nly thought is not discordant to my word. I may safely swear that I love my lady, and if other men should bear witness of it for me, there would be no fatse swearing.
My son, I will tell thee a tale to show that False Witness is at last found out. (2859 2c,60.)

Abhlles und Dadumia. Thetis, in order that her son Achilles inight not go to Troy, disguised him as a girl and put him to dwell with the daughters of king Lichomede. There he was the bedfellow of Deidamie, and so her maidenhead was lost. The Greeks in the meantime assailed Troy in vain, and it was told them by divination that unless they had Achilles, their war would be endless. Ulixes therefore was sent with Diomede to bring him, and coming to the kingdom of Lichomede he could not distinguish Achilles from the rest. Then he set forth the gifts which he had brought for the women, and among them a knight's harness brightly burnished. Achilles left all the rest and chose this, and then he came forth armed in it before them. He was glad enough, but not so Lichomede, who had been so overseen. Thus came out the treachery of False Witness; and if Thetis, who was a goddess, thus deceived Deidamie, what security have women against the untruth of lovers? (2961-3218.)

My father, tell me some tale about Perjury.
I will tell thee, my son, how Jason did to Medea, as it is written in the book of Troy. (3219-3246.)
Jason and Medea. Jason was the nephew of king Peleus; and desiring to achieve adventures and see strange lands, he took a company of knights, and among them Hercules, and sailed to the isle of Colchos to win the fleece of gold. On the way they touched at Troy, where the king Lamedon treated them discourteously, and then they came to Colchos. Oëtes, who was king there, endeavoured to persuade Jason to leave his adventure, but without success; and then the princess Medea entertained him with welcome. Moved by love of him she offered him her help to win the fleece, and he plighted his troth to her and swore that he would never part from her. She taught him what to do, and gave him a magic ring and an ointment, telling him also what charms and prayers to use, so that he might slay the serpent which guarded the fleece, yoke the fire-breathing oxen to the plough, sow the teeth of the serpent and slay the knights who should spring up.

He took his leave of her, and passing over the water in a boat did as Medea bade him. Returning with the fleece he was welcomed back by Medea and the rest, and that night he took Medea and her treasure on board his ship and they sailed away to Greece. It was vain to pursue: they were gone.

When they came to Greece, all received them with joy, and these lovers lived together, till they had two sons. Medea with her charms renewed the youth of Eson, Jason's father, and brought him back to the likeness of a young man of twenty years. No woman could have shown more love to a man than she did to Jason; and yet, when he bare the crown after his uncle Peleus was dead, he broke the oath which he had sworn and took Creusa, daughter of king Creon, to wife. Medea sent her the gift of a mantle, from which fire sprang out and consumed her; then in the presence of Jason she killed his two sons, and was gone to the court of Pallas above before he could draw his sword to slay her. Thus mayest thou see what sorrow it brings to swear an oath in love which is not sooth. (3247-4229.)
I have heard before this how Jason won the fleece, but tell me now who brought that fleece first to Colchos.

Phrirks and Helli. King Athemas by his first wife had two chiddren, Frixus and Hellen; but his second wife lino hated them and contrived a device agamst them. She sowed the land with sodden wheat ; and when no harvest carne, she caused the priests of Ceres to say that the land must be delivered of these children. The queen bade men throw the chuldren into the sea; but Juno saved them, and provided a sheep with golden fleece, which swarn with them over the waves. Hellen for dread fell off his back and so was lost, but her brother was borne over to the isle of Colchos, and there the tleece was set, which was the cause why Jason was so forswora.

My father, he who breaks his troth thus is worthy neither to love nor to be beloved. (4230-438z.)

4383-4(70. Usury. Another of the brood of Avarice is Usury, whose brokers run about like hounds, hunting after gain. He has unequal weights and measures, and he takes back a bean where be has lent a pea. So there are many lovers, who though the love they gave will hardly weigh a mite, yet ask a pound again; and often by the help of their brokers these buy love for little.

My father, I am not guilty of this. That which I give is far more than ever I take again. Usury will have double, but I would be content with haif. If my lady reward me not the better, I can never recover my cost. Nor yet have 1 ever used brokers in love. Dut thought is free, tny father, and to me it seems that my lady herself cannot be excused of this that ye call Usury. For one glance of her eye she has my whole beart, and she will render me nothing agan. She has all my love and I go loveless: she says not so much as 'Thanks.' Myself 1 can acquit, and if she be to blame in this, I pray God to give her grace to amend.

My son, thou speakest ill in that thou accusest thy fady. She may be such that her one glance is worth thy heart many times reckoned. Noreover in love the balatice is not even: though thy love weigh more, thou must not ask for return as a debt that is due; for Love is lord and does after his oun will. Be patient, and perchance all may turn to good. I am well pleased that thou hast used in love no broherage to deceise. $(4383$ 4572.)

Echo. Brokers of love receive at last that which they have deserved. Juno had Echoamong her maldens, and she was of accord with Jupiter to get him new loves and to blud her lady's eges. When Junn understood this, she reproved her and took vengeance, sending her to dwell in the woods and hills and repeat always the sound of the voices that calne to her ears. (4573-4652.)

If ever thou be wedded man, my son, use no such means as this. 4671-4884. Parsimony or Scarceness. Another there is whom Avarice has for the keeper of his house, and his name is Scarceness. It is easier to flay the flint than to get from him the value of a rush to heip another. How is it with thee, my son? Hast thou been scarce or free towards thy love?

My father, if I had all the treasure of Cresus or the gold of Octovien, I would give it all to her, if I might. But indeed $I$ never gave her any gift, for from me she will not take any, lest I should have some small cause of hope. Yet she takes from others and gives again, so that all speak well of her. As for me, she knows that my heart and all that I have is at her command and will be while I live. (4671-4780.)

Babio and Croceus. Scarceness accords not with love, and often a man has lost the coat for the hood. With gift a man may do much, and meed keeps love in house. Babio had a love named Viola, who was both fair and free; but he was a niggard, and so she was ill served. Croceus, liberal and amorous, came in her way, and she left Babio loveless. (4781-4862.)
My father, if there be anything amiss in me toward my love in this matter, I will amend it.

Thou sayest well, and I will pass on. (4863-4884.)
4885-5504. Ingratitude or Unkindness. This is a vice which repays no service, and when he has received a barnful, grudges to give a grain in return. God and Nature both condemn this vice, and even a beast loves the creature who does him kindness, as this tale will show by example. (4885-4936.)

Adrian and Bardus. Adrian, a great lord of Rome, while hunting in a forest, fell into a pit. He cried for help all day, but none heard till evening, when one Bardus, a woodcutter, came by with his ass, and heard Adrian promise to give half his goods to him who should help him. He let down a rope, and first an ape and then a serpent was drawn up by it. Bardus was terrified, but still the voice implored help, and at length Adrian was drawn up. At once this lord departed without thanks, and threatened Bardus with vengeance if ever he should claim the promise. The poor man went home, not daring to speak more, and on the next day, going to get wood, he found that the ape had requited his kindness by gathering for him a great heap of sticks, and so continued to do day by day; and the serpent brought him a precious stone in her mouth. This last he sold to a jeweller and afterwards found it again in his purse, and as often as he sold it, the same thing followed. At length this came to be known, and the Emperor heard of $i$. Calling Bardus before him he listened to his tale, and gave judgement that Adrian should fulfil his promise. (4937-5162.)

Flee this vice, my son, for many lovers are thus unkind.
Alas, father, that such a man should be, who when he has had what

lxxii GOWER'S ENGLISH WORKS

he wouid of love, can find it in his heart to be false. As forme, I dare not say that my lady is guilty of this Unkindness, but I for my pant am free.

Thou must not complain of thy lady, my son. Perchance thy desme is not such as she in honour can grant. It is well that thou art not guilty of Unkindness, and I will tell thee a tale to keep thee in that course. ( $5163-5230$.)

Theseus and Amalne. Minos, king of Crete, having war with those of Athens, compelled them as a tribute to send nine men yearly, whom he gave to be devoured by Minotaurus. The lot fell at last upon Theseus, son of the king of Athens, and he went with the rest to Crete Adriagne, daughter of Minos, loved him, and she gave bum help to slay the monster. Then he took her away with him by ship, and her sister Fedra went in thelr company. They rested in the isle of $\mathrm{Chio}_{3}$ and there he left Adragne sleeping, and sailed away with Fedra. Thus by his ingratitude and falsehood he broke the law of love, and eval came of it afterwards. (5231-5495)

5505-6074. Ravine, Ravine, in whose service is extortion, selzes other men's goods without nght and wathout payment. So there are lovers who wh take possession by force. ( 55055550 .)

Tercus. P'andion, king of Athens, had two daughters, Progne and Philomene. Progne was martied to Tereus, king of Thrace, and desirmg to see her sister, she sent Tercus to Athens to bring her. Coming back in company uith Phtomene he ravished her, and then maddened by her reproaches cut out her tongue, so that she could speak no articulate words. Then be shut her up in prison, and coming bome to his wife, he told her that ber sister was dead. Pbilomene in her prison prayed for delwerance, and at length weaving her story with letters and imagery in a cloth of silk, she sent it by a privy messenger to Progne. Progne delivered her sister, and together they concerted vengeance, with prayers to V'enus, Cupid and Apollo. Frogne slew the son which she had by Tereus and served up his fiesh to hum for meat, and when he would have pursued the sisters to take sengeance, the gods transformed them all three, Philomene to a nughtingale, which complaus ever for her lost maidenhead, Progne to a swallow, which twitters round houses and warns wives of the falsehood of their husbands, and Tereus to a lapwing, the falsest of birds, with a crest upon his head in token that be was a knight. (5551-6047.)

Father, I would choose rather to be trodden to death by wild horses or torn in pieces, than do such a thing as this against lore's Jaw. ( 6048 6074.)

6075-6492. ROBHLRy. The vice of Roblery gets his sustenance by that wheh he can take on the high-roads, in woods and in ficlds. So there are lovers, who, if they find a woman in a lonely place, will take a part of her wares, no matter who she may be ; and the wife who sits at home waiting for her husband's return from hunting will hear from him nothing of this, but only how his hounds have run or his hawks have flown. (6075-6144.)

Neptune and Cornix. Cornix was a maid attendant on Pallas, and as she went upon the shore, Neptune thought to rob her of the treasure which passes all others and is called the maidenhead. She prayed to Pallas, and by her help escaped from him in the form of a crow, rejoicing more to keep her maidenhead white under the blackness of the feathers than to lose it and be adorned with the fairest pearls. (6145-6217.)
Calistona. King Lichaon had a daughter Calistona, who desired ever to be a maiden and dwelt with the nymphs of Diane. Jupiter by craft stole her maidenhead, and Diane discovering it reproached her, so that she fled away. She was delivered of a son, Archas, but Juno in vengeance transformed her into a bear. In that likeness she met her son in the forest, and he bent his bow against her, but Jupiter ordained for them both so that they were saved from misfortune. (6225-6337.)
Such Robbery, my son, is ever to be avoided, and I will tell thee how in old days Virginity was held in esteem.
Valerius tells how the Emperor did honour to the virgin, when he met her in the way, and we hear also of Phirinus, who thrust out his eyes in order that he might the better keep his virginity.

Valentinian moreover, the Emperor, in his old age rejoiced more that he had overcome his flesh, than that he had conquered his enemies in battle. ( $6338-6428$.)

Evil follows when Virginity is taken away in lawless manner, as when Agamenon took Criseide from the city of Lesbon, and plague came upon the host, so that they sent her back with prayer and sacrifice.

Therefore do no Robbery in love's cause, my son. (6429-6492.)
6493-6960. Stealth. Coveitise has also a servant called Stealth, who takes his prey in secret, coming into houses at night, or cutting purses by day. Like the dog that comes back from worrying sheep, he looks all innocent, so that no man knows what he has done. There are lovers also who take by stealth, either kisses or other things. Hast thou done so ? (6493-656r.)

I dare not, father, for my heart is hers and will not do anything against her. Moreover Danger is so watchful a warden that none can steal anything from her. Strong locks make thieves into honest men, and by no lying in wait can I slip through his guard. Yet at night I often wake when others sleep, and I look out from my window upon the houses round, and mark the chamber where she lies. I stand there long in the cold and wish for some device of sorcery, whereby I might enter that chamber and steal. It brings me ease for the time to think of these things, but it profits me nothing in the end. It is for you to judge if I deserve penance for this or no.

Stealth does little good, my son, in the end. I will tell thee a taie from Ovid of stedth which was done by day. (6562-6712.)

Lewiortioc. I'hebus loved Leuchotoe, whom her mother kept close in chamber and seldom allowed to go forth. On a day he came in suddenly through her chamber wall and stole her maidentiead. Hes father, when he knew, dared not take quarrel with Phebus, but without pity he caused her to be buried alive; and Phebas wrought so that she sprang up as a golden flower, which ever follows the sun. (67136783.)

No wonder that this came to evil, my father, because it was done in broad day, but lovers sometimes have kept their thefts more secret. Tell me of something done by night. (6784-6806.)

Hercules and Faunus. Hercules and Eolen, going together on a pilgrmage towards Rome, rested in a cave. Faunus, with Saba and her nymphs, were in a wood hard by, and Faunus, having had a sight of Eolen, thought to come by night and steal. Hercules and Eolen went to rest on separate beds, having to offer sacrifice on the morrow, and as they had exchanged clothes with one another in sport, she had his mace by her and his clothes upon her bed, and he her wimple round his face and her mantle over him. The servants slept like drunken swine. Faunus came into the cave, and feeling the mace and lion's skin, he left her bed alone and went over to the other. Hercules seized ham and threw him on the floor, where be stll lay helpless on the morrow, a laughug-stock to Saba and the nymphs.

I have too faint a heart, father, for any such nichery. (6807-6960.)
6961-7609. Sacrilege. God has laid down a law that men shall not steal, but work for their sustenance, and yet there are those who will even take the goods of holy Church, and this is called Sacrilege. [There are three kinds of Sacrilege, namely, theft of holy thing from holy place, of common thing from holy place, or of holy thing from common place. ( $7015^{}-7029^{}$.)] Three princes especially in old days were gully of this, Antiochus, Nabuzardan and Nabugodunosor. This last wrought sacrilege in the temple at Jerusalem, and Battazar bis heir paid the penalty. (6961-7031.) [A tale is told of one Lucius at Rome, who robbed the statue of Apollo of a ring, a golven mantie and a golden beard, and excuscd himself, saying that he took the ring because it was held out towards him and offered, the mantle because it was too heavy for summer and too cold for winter, and the beard because it was not fit that Apollo should have a beard, when his father, who stood near him, was beardicss. Thus can men feign and excuse themselves. $\left.\left(7105^{}-7209^{}.\right)\right]$

There are lovers who at mass will whisper in there lady's ear or take from her hand a ring or glove. Some go to churches to seek out women and to show themselves there in fresh arriy, looking round upon them all and sighng, so that cach thuns it is for her ; and yet such a man loves none of them, but goes there only to steal their hearts. All this is Sacrilege.
My father, I do not so : but when my lady goes tomatins or to mass, thither I go also ; and then my looks are for her alone, and my prayers are that God may change her heart. I watch and wait to steal from her a word or look, and when I lead her up to the offering with my hand about her waist, I win a touch as well. Except in such things I have done no Sacrilege, but it is my power and not my will that fails.
Thy will is to blame, my son; the rest that thou hast said is of little account Yet all things have their time and place : the church is for prayer and the chamber for other things. That thou mayest know how Sacriege is punished, I will spend on thee a tale. (7032-7194.)

Paris and Helen. Lamedon was king of Troy, and against him the Greeks made war, and they slew him and destroyed his city. With other prisoners they took the fair Esiona his daughter, and she was given to Thelamon. Priamus, son of Lamedon, built ap Troy again, and with advice of his parliament he sent Antenor to demand back Esiona. The Greeks and Thelamon stoutly refused his request, and Priamus called his parliament again to debate of war or peace. Hector spoke for peace, alleging grounds of prudence, though he was ever the first in war; but his brother Paris gave his voice for avenging the wrong. He told how, as he slept beside a well, three goddesses came before him in a vision, and Venus, to whom he assigned the golden apple which was the prize of beauty, had promised to give him in Greece the fairest woman of all the earth. Paris then went forth to Greece, though Cassandra and Helenus lamented for the evil that was to come. Landed in an isle he met the queen Heleine, who came to do sacrifice there to Venus, and he stole her heart. Heleine was in the temple all the night, offering prayer to Venus, and Paris came all suddenly and bore her to his ship. This Sacrilege was the cause why the Greeks laid siege about Troy, and at last burnt and slew all that was within it. (7195-7590.)
Note also how Achilles saw Polixena in the temple of Apollo, and how Troilus first laid his love on Criseide in a holy place. Take heed therefore to thyself.

Thius Avarice has more branches than any other vice, and the working of it is everywhere seen; but if a man would live rightly, he must do Largess. ( $7591-7640$.)

7641-7844. Prodigality and Largess. Virtue lies between two extremes: here we see Avarice and Prodigality, and between them Liberality or Largess, which holds the middle path between too much and too little. Where Largess guides a man, he does what is right both to God and the world, and God rewards him with the gift of heaven. The world gives ever to him who hath; but it is better to give than to receive, to have thine own good than to crave that of others. 'If thy good suffice thee not, then refrain thy desires and suffice to thy good.' Charity begins with itself: if thots enruch others making thyself poor, thou wilt have little thanks. 'Jack is a good fellow;' they say while his money lasts, but when that is gone, then 'Jack was a good fellow,' and they leave hum to starve. (7641-7760.1

There are lovers who spend and waste their love with Prodigalty, setting therr heart upon many. But he who makes himself thus common, loses the spectal love of one, if she be wise. Hast thou thus wasted thy love?
Nay, father: I bave tasted here and there, but never truly loved any excepting one. On her indeed my love is wasted, for it brings no retum: I know not whether this is what ye mean by Prodigality.
My son, perchance thy love is not lost nor wasted. None can say how such a thing will end; therefore 1 know not whether thou hast lost or won. As summer returns after winter, so perchance thou mayest yet recover thy grace of love. (7761-7834.)

Lis. VI.
1-I4. Glutrony. The great origmal sin which brought death on all manhand was Gule, that is, Gluttony. The branches of it are many, but I shall speak of two only.

15 616. Drt nkenness makes a wise man foolish and a fool think hmself wise. The drumen man thinks that there is nothing that he does not know and nothing that be cannot do, yet he is withal so helpless that he can neither stand nor go ; he knows not what he is, nor whether it is day or night. In the morming he calls agan for the cup which made him lose his wits at night. The wine binds lum fast and makes him a subject and a slave. (5-75.)

There are lovers so besotted with love, that they know no more than drunken men what reason is. The greatest men have been thus overcome : Salomon, Sampson, Dand, Virgl and Arstotle. Confess of thou art thus drunken, for Ithink by thy countenance thou art schapen to this malady.

It is true, my father: I confess that I am drunk with love, and often 1 know not what J do, so that men marvel at me. When I am absent from my lady 1 am drunk with the thoughts of her, and when I am present, with looking upon her. At tumes I am in Paradise, and then 1 wake and my joy is turned to wore. I suffer then the fever of bot and colk, and the evil is that the nore I drank, the more I am athurst. Yet I think if 1 had truly a draught of the drink that I desire, I should be sobered and do weil ; bat tasting of this is forbidden me. (76-305)

Love-drunkenness, my son, is a grevous thing, and yet none can withstand it. It is not all of one knd, for Jupher has two tuns full of love-drink in his cellar, the one sweet and the other butter. Cupid is butler of both, and being blind he gives men to drink of them by chance, now of this and now of that, so that some laugh and others lower. I know by thy tale that thou hast drunk of the potion that is bitter. (306-390.)

Bacchus in the Desert. But thou must ever pray to attain to the other, whereby thy thirst may be allayed, as Bacchus prayed in the desert, when he and all his host were in danger of perishing by thirst. Jupiter sent a ram, which spurned the ground, and there sprang up a fountain of water. (391-439.)

Pray thou thus in thy need: a dumb man seldom gets land. Remember moreover that the butler is blind, and he may by chance give thee a drink of the sweet, which shall cause thee to grow sober.
Of love-drunkenness an example is Tristram, who drank with Bele Ysolde of the drink which Brangwein gave them : and that thou may the more eschew the company of drunken men, hear this tale. (440484.)

Marriage of Pirithous. The fair Ipotacie was wedded to Pirotoüs, and he invited his friends to the feast. They became drunk both with wine and with desire, and so they carried away the bride by violence from her husband. ( $485-529$.)

Galba and Vitellus were rulers of Spain, and so drunken were they both that the land cried out against them. They ravished both wife and maid, but at length they were brought under the law and condemned to die. Then they filled full a great vessel of wine and drank until their senses left them, and so they were slain, being already half dead. (537-595.)

617-1260. Delicacy. The vice of Delicacy will not lack any pleasure which meat or drink can give, and desires always something new.

So be who is delicate in love cannot content himself with what he has; but though he have a fair wife, yet he will set his heart on others, and though his lady make him cheer, he must have more than she can with honour give.
I am not guilty of this, father: I would be satisfied if I could be fed at all, except with woe. Yet some dainties I pick which please me for the time. (617-752.)
My sight is fed with dainties when I look upon her face and form, yet it may never be fed to the full, but always longs for more. (753-826.)

My hearing has a dainty feast when men commend her worthiness and grace, and above all when I hear her speak, for her words are to me like the winds of the South. Or again, I feed my ears with tales of those who loved before I was born, of Ydoine and Amadas and of many more, and I think how sorrow endures but for a time. (827-898.)

Finally, I have a cook whose name is Thought, who keeps his pots ever boiling with fancy and desire, and sets before me on the table all the pleasant sights that I have seen and uords that I have beard. Yet it is no full meal, but one of woulds and wishes, so that the food I have does me little good, and scrves only to keep off starvation, till I have the feast which shall satisfy my hunger. (899-938.)

Such are my three delights, and 1 tike my food thus of thanking. hearing and seeing, as a plover does of air. By Delicacy such as this I hope that 1 do no Gluttony.

It is in small things only that thou hast thy delight, my son; bus remember always that the delights of the body do grievance to the soul. (939-974.)

Dives and Lasayus. Christ tells a tale against this vice, which is read in Latin, but for the better knowledge of the truth I will declare it in Engl.sh. Christ saith, &c. (975-1109.)

Thus, my son, he who follows Delicacy and gives no alms shall fall into distress. He who has power over the good things of this world may weur the richest ornaments and eat the choicest food, yet be must put away Delicacy, if he would not starve his soul white feeding bis body. (1110-1150.)

Nero followed his lusts against nature, and in regard to Delicacy he wrought a subtle thing to know how his stomach fared. He chose three men to eat and drimk at his table. On a certain day after meat he caused one to ride, another to walk, and the third to sleep, and after this he killed them, in order that he might see which had best digested his food.

He refrained from nothing that was pleasant to him, and above all be set his heart on nomen, so that he spared neither wife nor maid. So drunk was he with his lusts. (1151-1226.)

Delicacy and Drunkenness go together and pass ail bounds of reason. Thus too Love is at times so unrestramed that he takes no heed of God's law, but calls in the powers of heaven and earth and hell to achieve has purpose. ( $1227-1260$.)

1261-240\%. Sorctry. There is nothing that love will not dare. He follows no law but his own, and goes forth like Bayard the bliod horse, till he fall into the ditch. Thus at times he follows Sorcery, whether Geomance, Ydromance, Piromance or Nisromance, with all the craft both of invocation of spirits and of natural magic.

I know nothing of this, father; but to win my lady I would once have done all that mighs be done, whether in hell or heaven.

That goes very neat, my son : but I warn thee that he who does so is beguled at last, and that Sorcery has no good end. (1261 1390.$)$

Ui)sses and Teligonus. Of throse that were at Troy Uluxes had a natne above all for craft and magic arts. This king was vexed by storms as he returned, and in spite of needie and stone his ship was drisen upon the strand of Culy, where he found two queens, Calipsa and Circes. These were sorceresses and they changud many of his men to the form of beasts, but he overcame them with his sorceries, and at length he took his course for home, leaving Circes with child. His wife and all his people rejoiced at his home-coming, but when a man is most in his prosperity, then fortune makes him soonest fall. He had a dream, as he lay upon his bed, and he seemed to see a form of heavenly beauty. He embraced that image and it embraced him again, and it said to him : 'Our acquaintance shall be hereafter to our sorrow : one of us two shall take his death from this love in which we now rejoice.' It showed him then a sign, three fishes wrought upon a pennon, and so all suddenly went forth from him.

Uluxes started from sleep, and making his calculations upon this, he judged that the danger was to be feared from his son Thelamachus. Him therefore he shut up within castle wall, and he made for himself a stronghold and set his servants to keep guard. But none can make resistance against his fate: Thelogonus, his son by Circes, came to find his father, bearing as his ensign a pennon with three fishes upon his spear, and he came to this stronghold of Uluxes. The guards denied him entrance and an affray arose at the gate. The king came forth, and Thelogonus cast his spear at him, not knowing who he was. Uluxes was wounded to death, but he recognized the figure of his dream and the sign upon the pennon, and embraced his son, commending him to the care of Thelamachus before he died.

Lo, what evil came to him of Sorcery : by Sorcery he begat his son, and that which was done against nature was against nature avenged. (1391-1788.)

Nectanaüres. The king of Egypt, Nectanabus, a great magician, fled from his enemies to Macedoine. In the chief city there the queen Olimpias kept the feast of her nativity and rode forth to be seen by the people. Nectanabus stood with the others, and gazed upon her so steadfastly, that the queen sent for him and asked him who he was. He replied that he was one who had a message for her, which must be said in private. She appointed a time, and he told her how the god Amos of Lybia desired to be her bedfellow and would beget a child of her who should subdue the whole earth. To prove his words he caused her by his magic to have a vision, which she took for prophecy; and so at length, coming in the person of the god and transforming himself into various shapes, he had his will of her and begat a son. Nectanabus caused Philip the king, being from home, to have a vision whereby he supposed that a god had lain with his wife, and returning he found her with child. Still he doubted, but by further signs and wonders Nectanabus caused him to forget his jealousy. Amid portents of earthquake and of tempest the child was born, and his name was called Alexander. He grew up, and Aristotle taught him philosophy, while Nectanabus instructed him in astronomy. On a certain night, when they were upon a tower observing the stars, Nectanabus pro-

Alexander, to prove that he lied, threw him from the tower to the ground, ashing a hat was the use of his art if he could not prophesy his own fate rishtly. Nectanabus made known the truth, and Alexander was sorry, and told his mother how it was. Thus he died and was buried, and this was the reward of Sorcery. (1789-2366.)

Loroaster too and Sutul came to eval by Surcery. I counsel thee never to use this, my son. ( $2367-2400$.)

I will not, father. But I beseech you tell me something of that Plubosophy which, as ye said, Anstotle taught to Alexander: for to bear of something new might ease my pain.

Thou sayest well; but I, who am of the school of Venus, know not much of this high lore. Yet, as it is comprehended in a book, I can in part show forth to thee how it is. (2401-2440.)

Lib. VII,

1-60. Thou hast prayed me to declare to thee the school of Aristotle, and how Alexander was taught. This is not the matter on which we were set to speak ; yet since wisclom is to be desired above all things, I will tell thee of that which Calistre and Aristotle urote to Alexander.

There are three principal points of Philosophy: Theoric, Rhetonc, Practic.

61-1506. Theoric. The parts of Theoric are three: Theology, Physics and Mathematics. The first treats of God and things spiritual : the second of bodaly things, such as man, beast, herb and stone; and the third has four divisions, Arithmetic, Music, Geometry and Astronomy. (61-202.)

Arstote taught this young king of the four elements and the four complexions of man, of the princtpal divisions of the earth, and of the fifth element, Orbis, which contains the whole. (203632.)

To speak next of Astronomy, this Orbis is that which we call the firmament, and in it are first the seven Planets, and then the twelve Stgns of the Zodlac, about each of which Alexander was taught in turn. (633-1280.)

Nectanabus, teaching bum natural magı, informed hinn of the Fifteen Stars and of the stone and herb appropriate to each, by means of which wonders may be worked. (1281-1438.)
The authors whu taught this science of Astronomy were first Noë, then Nembrot, and after them many others, but principally Tholomee, who wrote the book of Almagest, and Itermes. (1439-1492.)

Thus these Fhilusophers taught Alexander in regard to that which is calied Theoric. ( 1493 1506.)

I507-1640. RHETURIC. Speech is given to than alone and he must take beed that he turn it to no evil use. There $s$ virtue in stones and in herbs, but word has virtue more than any carthly thing. But the word must not be discordant with the thought, as when Uluxes by his eloquence persuaded Anthenor to betray to him the city of Troy. Words are both evil and good, they make friend of foe and foe of friend. For a true example of Rhetoric read how Julius and the consul Cithero pleaded against one another when the treason of Catiline was discovered.

1641-5397. Practic. This has three divisions, Ethics, Economics and Politics. A king must learn the first in order that he may rule himself in the way of good living, the second teaches him how to order his household, and the third how to govern his kingdom. (1641-1710.)

1711-1984. The first point of Policy is Truth, which above all things ought to be found in a king; and this is in part signified by the jewels of his crown.

To show thee that Truth is the sovereign virtue of all, I will tell thee a tale. (1711-1782.)

King, Wine, Woman and Truth. Daires, Soldan of Perce, had three wise men about his chamber, Arpaghes, Manachaz and Zorobabel. To them he put the question, which is strongest, wine, woman, or a king. Of this they disputed in turn, and Arpaghes said, - A king is the strongest, for he has power over men and can raise them up and cast them down : also he alone stands free from the law.' Manachaz said, 'Wine is the strongest, for this takes reason away from the wise and makes the fool seem learned, this turns cowardice to courage and avarice to largess.' Zorobabel said, 'Women are the strongest, for the king and all other men come of women and bow to the love of women, and he told how he had seen Cirus upon his throne overcome by the love of Apemen, daughter of Besazis, so that she did with him what she would. Women too make men desire honour, and woman is next to God the greatest help of man, as Alceste, wife of Ametus, gave her life to save her husband. Thus Zorobabel told his opinion, but nevertheless he said that above all these the mightiest of all earthly things is Truth: and so the question was concluded, and Zorobabel was most commended for his judgement. (1783-1984.)

1985-2694. Largess is the second point of Policy. A king must be free from the vices both of Avarice and of Prodigality. As Aristotle taught by the ill example of the king of Chaldee, he must spend his own substance and not that of his people, he must do justice before he makes gifts, and his gifts must be to those who have deserved them. (1985-2060.)

Julius and the poor Knight. A knight came to plead his cause at Rome, where the Emperor Julius was in presence; but he could get no advocate, because he was poor. He prayed for justice to the Emperor, and Julius assigned him an advocate. The knight was angry, and said, 'When I was with thee in Afric, I fought myself and put no man in my stead; and so thou here shouldest speak for me

Ixxxii GOWER'S ENGLISH WORKS

thyself.' Jutius took his cause in hand; and thus every worthy kıng should belp his servants when in need. (2061 2114)
Antigonus and Cinichus. A king should know how much to giveA poor knight asked king Antigonus for a great $5 u m$, and he rephed, 'That is too much for thee to ask': then when the knight asked a very small gift, he said, 'That is too hittle for me to give.'

Kings must not exceed the dute measure ingiving, and especially they ought not to give to flatterers, who offend against God, against the prance and against the people. Yet flattery is always found in the courts of kings. (2115-2216.)
Diogenes and Aristippus. Two Philosophers went from Carthage to Athens to learn, and thence returned again. The one, Dtogenes, was content to dwell apart and study, the other, Arisippus, went to court and got honour and wealth by flattery. Diogenes was gathering herbs in his garden and washing them in the river, when Arisippus passed by with a company, and said, "If thou hadst known how to nake thyself pleasing to thy prince, there would have been no need for thee to pick herbs.' The other replied, 'If thou hadst known how to pick herbs, there would have been no need for thee to make thyself pleasing by thy flatteries.' (2217-2317.)

But the example of Arisippus is chiefly followed, and flattery is that which makes men beloved. [Dante the poet said once to a flatterer, 'Thou hast many more servants than $I$, for a poet cannot find how to feed and clothe himself, but a flatterer may mile and lead a king and all his land.'] There was a custom among the Romans, which was established against flattery, as follows. (2318-2354.)

Roman Triumph. When an Emperor had a triumph after victory, he went in pomp with four white horses and the nobles of the land before and behind him: but one sat with him in his car, who said contunually, ' Know thyself, and remember that good fortune is only for a time.' Moreover he and every other man might speak whatever truth he knew to the Emperor, whether good or bad. (2355-2411.)

7he Emperor and his Afusous. Again, when an Emperor was enthroned, his masons came to ask ham how be would have the stone made for his tomb. There was no flattery then, to deceive princes. (2412-2448.)
(acsar's Answer. One came and did reverence to Cesar, as if he nere a god: then be came and sat down by his side as an equal. 'If thou art a god,' he said, 'I have done well in worshippng thee, but if a man, in sittug by thy side.' Cesar answered that he was a fool, and had done 111 in one of two things, either in sittang by the side of his god or in worshipping a mere man, They that heard this took it is a lesson against fattery. ( $2449-2490$.)

Ahab and Micaiah. I Kings xxii. (2527-2694.)

Maximis, when he appointed a judge, inquired carefully whether he were virtuous or no. Thus the course of law was not hindered by coveitise. (2765-2782.)

Gaius Fabricius, consul of Rome, when the Samnites brought him gold, tried it with taste and smell, and said he knew not for what it would serve. It was better, he said, to rule the men who had the gold, than to possess gold and lose the liberty to be just. (2783-2817.)

In those times none was preferred to the office of judge unless he were a friend to the common right. (2818-2832.)

Conrad ordered matters so that in his time no man durst set aside the law for gold. (2833-2844)

Carmidotoire the consul slew himself rather than allow his own law to be broken, when by inadvertence he had come armed to the Senatehouse. (2845-2888.)

Cambyses flayed a corrupt judge, and nailed his skin upon the chair where his son was set to judge in his place. (2889-2904.)

Ligurgius, prince of Athens, having established good laws in his city, took an oath from the citizens that they would change nothing during his absence; and so he departed, never to return, desiring that Athens might still enjoy good laws. (2917-3028.)

The first Lawgivers. The names of those who first made laws ought to be handed down to fame. They are Moses, Mercurius, Neuma Pompilius, Ligurgius, Foroneus, Romulus. Kings ought to be led by law, and it is a scandal to a king if the law be not executed. (3029-3102.)

3103-4214. The fourth point of Policy is Pity. This is the virtue by which the King of kings was moved when he sent his Son down to this earth. Every subject should fear his king, and every king should have mercy on his people. [The apostle James says that he who shows no pity shall find none. Cassodre says that the kingdom is safe where pity dwells. Tullius that the king who is overcome by pity bears a shield of victory. We read how a knight appealed from the wrath of Alexander to his pity and so obtained grace. ( $3149^{}-3179^{}$.)] Constantine said, ' He who is a servant to pity, is worthy to rule all else.' Troian said that he desired his people to obey him rather from love than fear. (3103-3162.)
[The Pagan and the Jew. Two travellers went through the desert together, and each asked the other of his belief. The one said, 'I am a Pagan, and by my faith 1 ought to love all men alike and do to others as I would they should do to me.' The other, 'I am a Jew, and by my faith J ought to be true to no man, except he be a Jew, as 1 am. ${ }^{1}$ The day was hot and the Pagan rode on an ass with his baggage, while the Jew went on foot. The Jew asked the Pagan to let him case his weariness by riding, and the other assented. So they went on, but when the Pagan desired has ass back, the Jew rode on, saying that thus he did his duty by his law. The Pagan prayed to God to judge bas quarrel, and going on further he found the Jew stain by a lion and the ass with the baggage standing by him. Thus a man may know how the putful man deserves puty, and that lack of pity 15 the cause of evil. $\left.\left(3207^{}-3360^{}.\right)\right]$

Ixxxiv GOWER'S ENGLISH WORKS

Codrus, king of Athens, having a war, was informed by Apollo that etther he must perish in the battle or his people be discomfited. He had pity upon his people and gave his life for them. Where have we such kings now? (3163-3214.)
Pompey had war against the king of Ermenie, and having taken bim captive, he gave him his crown again and restored him to bis kingdom. (3215 3248.)

Cruelty is the opposite of Pity. (3249-3266.)
Leonaws the tyrant cruelly cut off the nose and lips of the merciful Justanian: he was so served himself by Tiberius, and Justinian was restored to the empire. (3267-3294.)

Siculus the cruel king caused Berillus to make a bull of brass, within which men should be burnt to death. Berillus was himself the first who suffered this torture. (3295-3332.)

lachoon devoured the bodies of his guests and was changed into 2 wolf. ( 33553369 .)

Tyranny may not last. The Lion will not slay the man who falls down before him to entreat mercy, and how then ought a Prince to destroy the man who asks his mercy? Yet some tyrants have been so cruel that Pity cannot move them. ( $3370-3416$.

Sperlachus, a warrior and a cruel man, made war on the queen Thameris, and bawng taken her son prisuner, he slew him without mercy. The queen gathered a power and took the tyrant in an ambush. Theu she tilled a vessel with the blood of his princes and cast hom therein, bidding him drimk his fill of blood. (3417 3513)

A king, however, must not fall to slay in the cause of Justice, and he must be a champron of his people without any weak pity. If he fears without cause, lie is like thase in the fable who were in dread when the Mountan was in labour, and at leneth it brought forth a mouse.

As there is a time for peace, so there is also a tume for war, and here too virtue stands between two extremes, between foolish pity and rash cruelty. Of men who have undertaken war for a righteous cause there are examples in the Bible, and of those I will tell thee one. (3514-3626.)

Story of Gideon. Judges vii. (3627-3806.)
Saul and Agag. Saul failed to cbey God's command to slay Agag, showing pity wrongfully : therefore he lost his life and his kingdom. (3807-3845.)
On the other hand Salomon obeyed his father David's command in slaying Joab, and yet he showed mercy in his reign and wrought no tyranny. Also he was wise and had worthy men about him, and there is nothing better for a ruler than Wisdom. Salomon asked for this gift from God, and this it is which a king chiefly needs in order to hold the balance even between Justice and Pity. (3846-3944.)

Courtiers and Fool. Lucius, king of Rome, asked his steward and his chamberlain what men said about him. The steward merely flattered in his reply, but the chamberlain answered that people thought he would be a worthy king if he had good counsellors. The fool, who played with his bauble by the fire, laughed at both, and said, ' If the king were wise, the council would not be bad.' Thus the king was instructed and put away his bad counsellors. (3945-401a)
Folly of Rehoboam. I Kings xii. 1-20. (4027-4129.)
Counsel of young men thus leads to ruin. There is a question whether it is better that the king be wise or his council. The answer is that it is better to have wise counsellors. ( $4130-4180$.)

The Emperor Anthonius said he would rather have one of his subjects saved than a thousand of his enemies slain. Mercy mingled with justice is the foundation of every king's rule. Thus I have spoken of four points, Truth, Largess, Pity and Justice. There is yet a fifth. (4181-4214.)

4215-5397. Chastity, the fifth point of Policy. The male is made for the female, but one must not desire many. A man must keep the troth he has plighted in marriage, and this all the more in the high and holy estate of a king.

Aristotle advised Alexander to frequent the company of fair women, but not to beguile himself with them. For it is not they who beguile the men, but the men beguile themselves. The water is not to blame if a man drown himself in it, nor the gold if men covet it. It is by nature that a man loves, but not by nature that he loses his wits: that is like frost in July or hose worn over the shoe. Yet great princes have been thus misled. (4215-4312.)

Sardanapalus lost his kingdom and his honour, because he became effeminate in his lusts. (4313-4343.)
David, however, though he loved many women, preserved the honour of knighthood. (4344-4360.)

Cyrus had a war with the Lydians, and he could not conquer them.

Ixxxvi GOWER'S ENGLISH WORKS

Then, feigning, he made a perpetual peace with them, and they fell into idleness and fleshly lust, so that he subdued them easily. (436i 4405.)

Balaam adised king Amalech to send fair women among the Hebrews, and these led them into lust, so that they were discomfited in battle, thll Phinees caused them to amend their ways. (4406-4445)

This virtue of Chastity belongs especially to a king.
Satomon took wives of sundry nations and did idolatry in his folly. Therefore after his death his kingdom was divided,

Antonie, son of Seterus, gave an evil example of lust; and the tale which bere follows will show what is the end of tyranny and lechery ( $4446-4592$.)

Tarqum the tyrant had many sons, and among them Arrons. He had a war with the Gabiens, and to their city Arrons went, showing wounds which he sald he had recemed from his father and brethren. They took him as their leader, and he by his father's advice cut of the heads of their chief men, and so the Romans conquered the culy. They made a solemn sacrifice in the temple of Phebus, and a serpent came and devoured the offerings and quenched the fires. Fhebus sald that this was for the sin and pride of Tarquin and his son, and that be $w$ ho should first kiss his mother, should avenge the wrong. Brutus fell to the ground and kissed his mother Earth. (4593-4753.)

Tarquin had a par afterwards with Ardea, and they were long at the slege. A dispute arose between Arrons and Collatin as to the virtue of their wives, and they rode to Rome to see how they were employed. At the palace they fownd the wife of Arrons full of marth and thinking nothing of her husband; at the house of Collatin, Lucrere was working with her women and praying for her husband's return. Arrons was smitten with love of her, and returning again the next day he ravished her. She on the morrow calted her busband and her father, with whom came Brutus, and told them her tale. Refusing their forgoveness she slew herself, and they took the body into the market-place, where Brutus told the tale to the people. They remembered also the former evil doings of Tarquin and his son, and sent both into exule. ( $4754-5130$. )

Virginia. When Apprus Claudius was governor of Rome, he set his desire upon a gentle maid, daughter of Livius Virginus, and he caused his brother Marcus to claim her unrightfully as las slave. Her father was with the host, but he rode hastily to Rome; and when Appius adjudged her to his brother against the law, finding that he could save her from dishonour in no other way, be thrust her through with his sword and made his way back to the host. Thus the tyranny came to men's ears and the untighteous kng was deposed by the common consent. (5131-5306.)

As an example of chastity in marriage we read the story of Surra the daughter of Raguel. Seven men who married her were strangled by the fiend Asmod, because they took her only for lust ; but Thobie, taught by Raphael, had his will and yet kept the law of marriage. God has bound beasts by the law of nature only, but men must follow also the law of reason and do no lechery. Thus the philosopher taught to Alexander. (5307-5397.)

I thank you, father. The tales sound in my ears, but my heart is elsewhere ; for nothing can make me forget my love. Leave all else therefore, and let us return to our shrift.

Yes, my son, there is one point more, and this is the last. (53985438.)

Lib. VIII.

1-198. Laws of Marriage. God created Adam and Eve to repair the loss of Lucifer and his angels, and bade them increase and multiply. In the first generation by God's law brother and sister were joined in marriage, then afterwards cousin wedded cousin, as in the time of Habraham and Jacob. At last under Christian law Marriage was forbidden also in the third degree. Yet some men take no heed to kinship or religion, but go as a cock among the hens and as a stallion among the mares. Such love may be sweet at first, but afterwards it is bitter.

199-2008. Examples of Incest. Caligula the Roman Emperor bereft his three sisters of their virginity : therefore God bereft him of his life and of his empire.
Amon lay with his sister Thamar, and Absolon his brother took vengeance upon him.

Lot lay with his daughters, and the stocks which came from them were not good.
Thus if a man so set his love, he will afterwards sorely repent it; and of this I think to tell a tale which is long to hear. (199-270.)

Apollonius of Tyre. In a Chronicle called Pantheon I read how king Antiochus ravished his daughter and lived with her in $\sin$. To hinder her marriage, he proposed a problem to those who sought her love, and if a man failed to resolve it, he must lose his head. At length came the Prince Apollinus of Tyre, and the king proposed to him the question. He saw too clearly what the riddle meant, and Antiochus fearing shame put off the time of his reply for thirty days. (271-439.)

The Prince feared his vengeance and fled home to Tyre, and thence he departed secretly in a ship laden with wheat. Antiochus sent one Taliart in all haste to Tyre, with command to make away with the Prince by poison. Finding that Apollinus had fled, he returned.
In the meantime the Prince came to Tharsis, and took lodging there with one Strangulio and his wife Dionise. The city was suffering famine, and Apollinus gave them his wheat as a free gift, in return for which they set up a statue of him in the common place. (4.0570.)

A man cane to him from Tyre and reported that king Antiochus desired to slay hm. He was afrad and fled thence again by ship. A storm came upon him and the ship was wrecked: Apollinus alone came alve to land. A fisherman belped him and directed him to the town of Pentapolim, where lie found the people gathered to see games, and the king and queen of the country there present. (571-695.)

He surpassed all others in the games, and the king called hom to stlpper in his hail. At supper he was sad and ate nothing, and the king sent to him bis daughter to console hum. To her he told his name and country, and with that he let the tears run down his cheeks. She fetched a harp and sang to it, and he took it from her hand and played and sang dutinely. They all saw that he was of gentle blood. (696799)

The king's daughter desired her father that he might be her teacher, and in the course of time she turned with all her heart to love of him. she so lost her appetite for meat and drink and sleep that she was in danger of her life.

Three sons of princes demanded ber in marriage, and she by letter informed her father how the matter stood: if she might not have Apolints, she would have none other. ( $800-9$ nit.)

The king sent for Apollinus and showed hum his daughter's letter. He assented gladly, and the marriage took place with great festivity. Soon after this men came from Tyre reporting that Antiochus and his daughter were dead, having been both struck by lightning, and entreating him to return to his own people. All were rejoiced to hear that the king's daughter had married so worthy a prince. (912 rorg.)

Apollinus satled away with his wife, she beng with child. A storm arose and she began to be in travail. In anguish she was delivered of a maid child, but she herself lay dead. (10zo-1058.)

Apollinus sorrowed as never man sorrowed before, but the master of the ship required that the dead body be cast out of the ship, because the sea will not hold within itself any dead creature, and the ship would be driven on the shore if the body remaned within her. They made therefore a coffer closely bound with ron and covered with putch, in which they placed the corpse, with gold and jewels, and with a letter praying that she might receive bunal; and so they cast it overboard. A polhnus in the meantime saled first to Tharsis. (1059-1150.)

The coffer was cast up at Ephesim and was found by Cerymon, a great plysician. He by his art restored the seeming corpse to life, and she took upon herself the rule of religion and dwelt with other women in the temple of Diane. (153t-1271.)
Apolinus coming to Tharsis entrusted bis infant daughter Thaise to the care of Stranguito and Dionise, and so he sailed on to Tyre. This daughter, until she was fourteen years old, grew up with the daughter of Strangulio, but Thaise was preferred to the other in all places where they went, and Dionise was therefore wroth. She bade her bondman Theophilus take Thaise down to the shore of the sea and there slay her. He brought her to the sea, but her cry called forth pirates from their hiding-place, who carried her with them away to Mitelene and sold her to Leonin, master of a brothel. (1272-1423.)

The young men who came to her were moved by compassion and did her no wrong, so that Leonin sent his own servant in to her. She entreated to be permitted to make gain for him in some other way, and being taken from the brothel and placed in security, she taught such things as gentlewomen desire to learn, and her name went forth over all the land. (1424-1497.)

Theophilus reported that he had slain Thaise, and Dionise, pretending that she had died suddenly, made a great funeral and set up 2 tomb with an epitaph. After this, Apollinus came to seek for his daughter at Tharsis, and hearing that she was dead, he put forth to sea again in grievous sorrow. He lay weeping alone in the darkness of the ship's hold, until under stress of storm they came to Mitelene. (14981617.)

Hearing of his grief, the lord of the city, Athenagoras, sent Thaise to comfort him. He at first rejected all her consolation, but then to his joy discovered that she was the daughter for whom he mourned. Athenagoras asked for her in marriage and was wedded to her. (16181776.)

They went forth all together with intent to avenge the treason at Tharsis, bat Apollinus was warned in a dream to go to Ephesim, and there in the temple of Diane he found the wife whom he supposed to have been dead. Thence they voyaged to Tyre and were received with joy. Athenagoras and Thaise were there crowned king and queen, and Apollinus sailed away and took due vengeance upon Strangulio and Dionise. (1777-1962.)
When this was done, a letter came to him from Pentapolim, praying him to come and receive that kingdom, since the king was dead. They had a good voyage thither, and he and his wife were crowned there and led their life happily. (1963-2008.)

Thus, my son, thou mayest see how it is with those that love in a good manner, but it is not love when men take their lust like beasts.

2029-3172. Conclusion. Father, I may acquit myself in this, but I entreat your counsel as to what way I shall follow in my love.

I counsel thee, my son, to labour no more in things which bring thee no profit. The end of every pleasure is pain. Love is blind, and makes all his servants blind : thou mayest yet withdraw and set thyself under the law of reason.

It is easy to say so, father. My woe is but a game to you, feeling nothing of that which 1 feel. The hart that goes free knows not the sorrows of the ox under the yoke. But I entreat you to present for me a Supplication to Venus and Cupid, and bring me a good answer back. (2009-2188.)

Then arose a great debate between my Priest and me: my reason understood him well, but my will was against him. At length he agreed to deliver my Supplication, and with tears instead of ink I wrote the letter thus: 'The wofull pene of loves maladie," &c. (2189-2300.)

The Iriest went forth to present my petition, and I abode. Suddemy Venus stood by me, and I fcll upon my knee and prayed her to do me grace. 'What is thy name?' she sard, as if in game. 'John Gower.' I replied. 'I have read thy bull,' she said, 'in which thou hast complamed to Nature and to me. Nature is mistress where she will, and I excuse thee for following her law : but as for what thou sayest, that I am bound to relieve thee, because thou hast served in my Court, I wall give thee medicine that will heal thy heart, but perchance it will not be such as thou desirest.' (2301-2376.)
Half in scom she spoke to me of my age and hoary locks, and counselled me to make a 'beau retret,' while there was yet time; for even though 1 should attain to my desire, I could not hold covenant duly with love.

1 grew cold suddenly for sorrow of my heart, and lay swooning on the ground. Then methought I saw Cupid with his bow bent, and with him a great company, those gentle folk who once were lovers, arrayed in sundry bands. (2377-2459.)

Youth was the leader of one company, and these had garlands, some of the leaf and some of the flower. They went with piping and with song which resounded all about: they laughed and danced and played, and talked of kuighthood and of ladies' love. There was Tristram with Ysolde, Lancelot with Gunnore, Jason with Creusa, Hercules with Eole, Troilus wath Criseide, but in his mirth he was yet heavy of cheer because of Diomede. Those also I saw who died for love, as Narcissus, Puramus, Achulles; and the wormen who were forsaken, Dido, Philis, Adriagne, Deianire and Medea. Many others too I saw, but four uomen especially who were most commended as examples in marriage, Penolope, Lucrece, Alceste and Alcione. Youth, which led this company, took no heed of me. (2460-2665.)

Then came lild, keading a company not so great. Their music was low and their dancing soft : they sm.led, but they did not laugh aloud. There was David with Bersabee, and Salomun with his wives and concubses, Sampson with Datida, and Aristotle with the queen of Creece ; Virgll also and Plato and Ovid the poet. (2665 2725.)

When this company was come to the place where 1 lay, they entreated Venus for me, and even some of the younger band sald that it was great pity. Cupid came with Venus to me as I lay, and the lovers atl pressed round to see. Some said that love was folly in the old, and others that no age could be free, and that while there was yet oil in the lamp, it might always be set alight. Cupid groped after me till he found me, and then he drew forth that fiery lance which before he had cast through my heart, and Venus anointed my wound with a cooling ointment and gave me a mirror in which I might behold myself. I saw my face wrinkled and my eyes dim, and I likened myself to that time of year when winter has despoiled the earth. Then Reason returned to me and I was made sober and sound. (2726-2869.)
Venus beheld me, and laughing asked me what Love was. I answered with confusion that I knew him not, and prayed that I might be excused from my attendance on her Court. As touching my Confession too, I asked an absolution, and the Priest gave it readily. Then the queen delivered to me a pair of beads to hang about my neck, and on them was written Por reposer in gold. 'Thus,' said she, 'have I provided for thine ease, and my will is that thou pray for peace. Stay no more in my Court, but go where moral virtue dwells, where are those books which men say that thou hast written : thou and I must commune together never again. *Adieu, for 1 must go from thee.' And so enveloped in a starry cloud, Venus was taken to her place above, and her Priest departed also at the same time. I stood for a while amazed; and then I smiled, thinking of the beads that she had given me and of the prayers that I should say. And thus I took my way softly homeward. (2870-2970.)

To God, the Creator of all things, I pray for the welfare of this land, and that it may have peace and unity, which every estate should desire. I pray that the clergy may work after the rule of charity, that the order of knighthood may cause extortion to cease and defend the right of the Church, that merchants may follow honesty, and above all that the king may keep himself and all the other estates of the kingdom in the right way. The king who humbly follows the law of

* Adieu, for I must go from thee. And greet Chaucer well, as my disciple and my poet, who has filled the land with the songs which he made for my sake. And bid him in his later age make his testament of love, as thou hast made thy shrift.'

And so enveloped in a starry cloud, Venus was taken to her place above, and I turned homeward with my beads in hand. (2940*-2970*.)

To God, the Creator of all things, I pray for my worthy king Richard the Second, in whom has always been found Justice mingled with Pity. In his person it may be shown what a king should be, especially in that he sought no vengeance through cruelty. Though evil came upon the land, yet his estate was kept safe by the high God, as the sun is ever bright in himself, though the air be troubled. He sought love and peace and accord, not only here at home, but abroad also, following

God shall be blessed, and his name shall be remembered for ever. (297t-3105.)
I promised to make in English a boak between play and earnest, and now I ask that I may be excused for lack of curious skill. I have writen in rude plain words, as sickness and age would suffer me; and I pray my lords that I may stand in their grace, for I desire to do pleasure to those under whose rule I am. (3 $106-3137$.)
And now my Muse bids me rest and write no more of love, which turns the heart away from reason. Of this love then I take my final leave. But that love which stands confirmed by chartty, which may save the body and amend the soul, such love may God send us, that in heaven our joy may be wthout end. (3138-3172.)

I, bis subject, helpless with old age and sickness, desire to do him some pleasure, and therefore 1 present to him this poor book, made both for profit and for sport, and I ask that I may be excused for lack of curious skill. I have witten, as I best might, in rude plain words.

And now that I am feeble and old, my Muse bids me rest and write no more of love. He who has achieved what he desired may fitly do his service to love in songs and sayings; but if a man fail, it is otherwise: thercfore I take now my final leave of love. iv. Orthography and Phonology. - In the remarks upon Gower's language which here follow there is no systenatic completeness. Attention is called to such points as seem to be important or interesting, reference being made especially to the language of Chaucer, as dealt with in B.ten Brnk's Chaucers Sprathe und Verskunst (second edition, 1899). It is necessary perhaps to remark here upon a difference of procedure which distinguishes this investigation from those which have for their object the text of Chaucer or of other writers whose work is handed down to us in manuscripts which do not proceed from the author himself. In such cases we have first to ascertain what the author actually wrote, before we can draw any valid conclusions about the laws of his language. It may even be necessary to restrict the discussion to such forms as are authenticated by rhyme; but when we are compelled to do this, we must remember that we are accepting a rather dangerous limitation. The conclustons drawn from the rhyme-words of a Middle English author will probably not be precisely applicable to his language in general. The sphere of our investigations will be that in which the licentious and exceptional is most likely to be found. If he has any tendency to borrow from other dialects than his own or to use irregular forms, this tendency will be most seen in his rhymes, for it will probably be the exigencies of rhyme which suggest the variation. Chaucer repeatedly uses 'here,' in the sense of the modern 'her,' to rhyme with such words as 'bere,' ' spere,' but we should certainly not be justified in concluding that this and not 'hire' was the normal form of his language. Similarly in the case of Gower by examination of his rhymes alone we might be led to many very doubtful results. For example, we should gather that he almost always used the form sinne rather than senne, wile (verb) and not wole or wol, axe and not aske, sek (adj.) and never sik, hond and never hand, couthe and never coude, sente (pret.) rather than sende, the adverb ending -ly in preference to -liche or -lich. In these cases and in many others we might easily be misled, the forms of these words as used in rhyme being determined chiefly by the comparative frequency of the various rhyme-syllables. Most of the conclusions above mentioned, and others like them, have in fact been arrived at in a paper by K. Fahrenberg, published in the Archiv für die neueren Sprachen, vol. 89. The author of this paper, having only Pauli's text before him, very properly confines himself to an examination of the rhymes, and within these limits most of his results are sound enough ; but it would be very unsafe to treat them as generally applicable to the language of Gower. In our case it must be understood that the Fairfax manuscript is regarded (for reasons which will afterwards be stated) as a practically accurate reproduction of the author's original text, and consequently the occurrence of a particular form in rhyme is not held necessarily to be of any special significance.

Orthography.-This being premised, we shall proceed to note first some points which call for attention in the orthography of the text.

In describing the British Museum MS. Harl. 3869, Pauli takes occasion to observe: 'This copy is very remarkable on account of its orthography, which has been carried through almost rigorously according to simple and reasonable principles.' This system he appears to attribute to the copyist of the manyscript in question, but it is in fact that of the author, the text being copled very faithfully from the Fairfax manuscript itself. Pauli appears to have been repelled by the outward appearance of this 'small stout folio' with its rather untidy writing. He did not take the trouble to examine the Oxford copies; but he seems to have perceived that its orthography was the same as that of the Stafford manuscript, and this should have enlightened him. In fact, if instead of taking Berthelette as his basis, he had simply printed the text of the Harleian volume, there would hardly have been need of another edition.

The orthography of the Fairfax text, first hand, confirmed as it is in almost every particular by that of the Stafford manuscript, and supported also by the testimony of others, more especially of MS. Bodley 902 , may be assumed to be that of the author; and it is well worthy of our attention, for he evidently regarded exactness and consistency in spelling as a matter of some importance.

We may observe in the first place that it was not Gower's practice to mark vowel-length by doubling the vowel. Naturally there are some MSS. in which this is occasionally found, and in particular the third hand of A gives caas, paas, glade, maade, saake, waas, bee, breep, soo, aroos, moore, schoon, ooler, fooli, &c. with considerable frequency, while very many MSS. have book, liok, took, oon, heere, mateere, and some other forms of the same kind ; but this is not in accordance with the author's rule. In the Fairfax MS. the cases of doubled vowel are only occasional, except in the instance of good, which is thus regularly distinguished from god.

Of 00 there are very few cases except good. We have oon about three times for on, and blood, brood, coosff, da ( $=$ doe), foode, hool, schoo, too ( $a$ tae, woof, in isoleted instances. The doubling of a is more frequent, as beerv, cheche, cleene, dee (pl. ders), degree, ecm, rer, fee, feede, feer, flere, fert, frer, werr, wecre, wreche, jef, zecr, and a fow more Most of the above words, however, and in general all others, are written usually with a single vowel, and we have quite regularly, for example) ded, dedf, drem, ch, fend, frr, grel, hed, her ( = hais), lef, red, slep, boh, bow, brod, fot, gow, hot, lok, now, schom, sowe soon), fok, woh, and so on, Where there is varsation of speiling in this respect, it is not felt to be a matter whach concerns the rhyme; for we have ewrer : pourv, fers : whes, owne: wrene, there : forrc, good : stod, fode : goodf, do . schoo, Ac., though sometımes the speling of the rhyme-words is evidently brought into harmony, as meene : Almeenc, ii. 2465 f., beave : weere, iv. 1323 f., brood : good, v. 4375 f., goode : foode, vii. 519 f. In a few cases however a phonetic distinction seems to be intended, as when we find eet as preterite of ete, and beere (also bere) pret. plur. of beren.

Maii (the month) is regularly written with ii, but rhymes with mai, say, &c.

The doubling of final consonants, apparently to indicate vowel shortness, is more common, as in all, bladd, charr, hadd, happ, madd, bedd, fedd, fett, spedd, bitt, bridd, chidd, godd, rodd, beside al, char, had, hap, mad, bed, fet, &c.

The doubling of $s$ in a final tone syllable seems to have no such significance, as in Achilles : press, iv. a16r f., but Ulixes : pres, iv. 147 f., so matheles : encress, pes : encress, in all of which the vowel must be long.

One of the most noteworthy points of the orthography is the frequent use of $i e$ in tonic syllables for close $\bar{e}$. This appears in French words such as achieve, appiere, chief, chiere, clier, grieve, matiere, messagier, pier, \&c. (also in many of these cases $e$, as chere, cler, matere), but it is very commonly used also in words of English origin and seems invariably to be associated with the close sound of the vowel. Thus we have hiede, spriede, lief (but levere), sieke, diel, stiel, whiel, dieme, sieme, diere, fiere ( = company), hiere (adv.), hiere (verb), liere, stiere, and others, which have in most cases the alternative spelling with e, as hede, sprede, seke, del, stel, whel, deme, seme, \&c., but in all of which the vowel has the close sound.

It is impossible here to discuss the question how far this habit of spelling may have been introduced by analogy from French words with a similar sound of the vowel, and how far it may have grown out the Kentish use of $i e, y e$ for O. E. $\bar{e}, \bar{e}, \bar{i} e$. Reference may be made to the remarks in the Introduction to the volume of Gower's French Works, p. xxi, where it is suggested that $i e$, having lost its value as a diphthong in later Anglo-Norman, came to be regarded as a traditional symbol in many cases for close $\bar{e}$, and hence such forms as clier, clief, pier, prophiete, \&c., and as regards $i e$ in the Kentish dialect there is a useful statement in the paper by W. Heuser, Zum Kentischen Dialekt im Mittelenglischen, published in Anglia, xvii, 78 ff.

In any case the fact is pretty clear that this variation was confined by Gower to words in which he gave to the vowel a close sound, and it is therefore useful as a distinguishing note, though there are few words in which this is the only form of spelling.

Both in stems of words and in their terminations $i$ is on the whole preferred to $y$, so that we have crie, hide, lif, like, mile, ride, $& c$. more usually than crye, hyde, &c. (but perhaps $y$ more often after $m, n$, as knyht, myhte, nyht), and also arrai, mai, dai, havdi, ladi, worpi, mi, thi, more often on the whole than array, may, &c., but -ly in adverbs more often than -li.

In some few cases it seems that a distinction is pretty consistently made, as between wuryte (inf.) and write (past participle), and perhaps between wite (know) and wyte (blame).

Before $g h$ followed by $t$ we find $a$, $o$ almost regularly in place of au, ou. Thus we have aghte, straghte, taghte, boghte, broghte, doghter, noght, oghte, oght, soghte, wuroghte, &c., but occasionally broughte, doughter, ought, &c. Beside some of these there are forms in which $a u$ ( $a w$ ), ou (owe) are written, but followed by simple $h$, as strawhte, tawhte, douhter (dowhter).

There is no difference between -oun and -on as terminations of such French words as divisioun, complexionn, &cc., but -own is much the more usual form ${ }^{1}$. Where they occur in rhyme, the rhyme-words are usually assimilated to one another in form of spelling, but sometimes -own, on rhyme together, as division : doun, ii. 1743f., toun : condicion, v. 955r, constellacioun : relacion, vi. 2253 f.

In the case of an followed by a consonant in a tone-syllable the variation to aun seems to be merely a question of spelling, and we have such rhymes as chaunce : remembrance, ii. 893 f., demande : comaunde, iv. 9794, supplanted : enchaunted, ii. 2491, covenant : supplaunt, ii. 2367. In the French terminations -ance, ant, the simple form is decidedly preferred (but gower naunce : porvaaunce, Prol. 187 f., graunt : amblaunt, ii. 1505 f.), and so also in many other words, as change, strange, comande, demande, supplante (also comaunde, supplaunte). In other cases an is either the usual or the oaly form, as daunce, daunte, enchaunte, haunte, sclaundre.

With regard to the consonants, it should be observed that Gower consistently wrote sch for sh initially, so that we have regularly schal, schape, sche, schewe, schip, schrifte, and also lordschipe, worschipe, &c.', in other places usually ssh, as bisshop (also bisschop), buissh, fissh, fleissh (also fleisch), freissh, reisshe, wisshe.

The almost regular use of $h$ for $g h$ in such words as $h i h, n y h$, sih, kniht, liht, miht, niht, heihte, sleihte, &c. will be spoken of later.

Gower did not use 3 for $h$ or $g h$. Such forms as mizte, rijt, [^11]argte, wrouzt, are practically unknown in the best MSS. (F has moust once.) On the other hand initially in such words as $3 e$, zer, jive (forzive), zong, \&c., 3 is regularly used. Only late and inferior MSS. have $y$. In regard to this letter Gower's usage is exactly the reverse of that which we find in the Ayenbite of Incuyt. We have $\beta$ for th regularly except in the case of a capital letter being required, as at the beginning of a line, or in connexion with some foreign words and names as thalemans, thevangile, rethorique, Athemas, Anthenor, Thebith. Cases of th for $\beta$ in ordinary English words are very rare in F (but i. 2890, v. 2319, vii. 4203).

In some words there is an interchange of $c$ and $s$, as decerte, pourchace pourchase, servics servise, rancoun, suffice suffise, sufficant, &c, and the French termination -esse is also spelt -esce, as largesse largesce, simplesce simpleses; so also encresce, redresce, &c. In such points the orthography of Romance words is usually in accordance with that which we find in the author's French writings, in which also are found such etymological forms as decripte, double.

Before quitting the general subject, we ought to note certain words of common occurrence which are spelt not quite in the usual way. The author regularly writes bot for but, be for by, when used as a preposition and unemphatic, ous for us (pers. pron.), noght for not (not being used for ne wot). Some forms of proper names, as Habraham, Irahel, are characteristic. In these points, as in many others, the writer evidently followed a definite system, and in spite of the variations recorded, the orthography of the Fairfax and Stafford MSS. certainly conveys to the reader the general impression of regularity and consistency.

Phonology. (i) O. E. short vowels and diphthongs.
O.E. a, $\infty$, ea. In the case of $a(o)$ before a lengthening nasal combination, $l d, n d, m b, n g, \& c$., we may note that though hond, honde, hondes are preferred, as by Chaucer, yet hand, handes pretty frequently occur, as i. 2, 1807, 2994, ii. 574, iii. 116, v. 1505, \&c. (also handle, iii. 1956, v. 1949), and that without any necessity of rhyme. In fact hand seems to be rather preferred except in rhyme. Contrary to what is apparently Chaucer's usage we find thonk, thonke as the regular forms in Gower, and only occasionally thank, as ii. 60,2012 . This may be due to the Kentish tendency to lengthen before $n k$, which perhaps was pronounced nearly as $n g$ (see Morsbach, Mittelengl. Gramm.,

xcviii GOWER'S ENGLISH WORKS

p. 128), and in thus connexion we may note the fact that the Fairfax MS. twice has pong for ponk. On the other hand there is no definite trace of the principle which has been discovered in some of the Kentish texts of lengthening before these combinations when a vowel follows, while preserving a when the consonant group ends the word, honde, stonde, ponke, &ce., but hand, stand, pank'. Gower uses handes as well as hand, and interchanges hange and honge, sang and song, according to convenience.

Note that upon rhymes freely with on ( $=$ one), onom, gon, \&c, but the supposed rhyme on ( $\bar{\phi} x$ ) : mone, i. sijg, noted by Fahrenberg, is really one (an) : monc. In some cases of original a shortened to a Gower prefers e to $a$, as eny, only occastonally any, eddre besude adlure, but lesse, Irdde only for the sake of rhyme.
ea before $h$ becomes $i$ in sih (from seah, sah, pret. of sion), which in Gower is the usual form of the word. ag forms ai $(a y)$, as in dai, lay, mai, fain, slain, and other ai forms, which are not interchangeable with ei (but said with variant seid by influence of seie).
O. E. e. When we are dealing with so careful a rhymer as Gower, we need hardly remark upon the absolute distinction made between $\varepsilon$ derived from O . E. $\check{c}$ and $\bar{c}$ of whatever origin. The case of skicrep: hiere $\beta$, cited by Fahrenberg as an instance of the opposite, cannot be regarded as a real exception, in view of the uncertain derivation of skiere. His other cases of supposed $\varepsilon: f$ are instances of the pret. pl. spicke (speke), from spriecon, as spieke : beseke, ii. 959, sicke : spicke, ij. 1455. One is doubtful, viz. seke: mispeke, ii. 2007, where mispeke may be pret. subjunctive; and besides these, wndergete : flete, ii. 1133 f , is irregular.

There is, however, also a well marked distinction between newlengthened $\bar{g}$ in words like trede, slede, bere, sperc, \&re, forzete, sete, brgete (inf. and partic.), metc (subst.), \&ic., and $\bar{\xi}$ from $\bar{e}$ or is, the distinction being due presumably to imperfect lengthening. With the first class rank also words in which $e$ is derived from O. E. $y$ in open syllables, as lere (loss) from O. E. lyre, stere (stir) from styrian, dede (pret.) from dyde, and also e in anszuere.

Thus we find the following quite distunet sets of rhymes: bede, forbede past participles, bede (subst), alede (pret. $=$ did, siede (stead), fredf, [^12]forming one class and rhyming together, while they are kept entirely apart from throde, drede, dede (= dead), rede, pl. adj. ( $=$ red), which have of from ia or $\overline{\mathbb{E}}$. On the other hand, bede the pret. plur. of bidde (from bädon) rhymes with dede (dead), e. g. i. 2047.

So also answerv, beve (subst.), bere (verb inf.), forbere, dere (destroy), lere (loss), steve (stir), bestere, sweve (verb), tere (verb), weve (wear), were (defend), form one class of rhyme-words as against ere, fore (fear), there, were (from minow), \&c. But eeve (verb) from enian rhymes with there, v. 8rgf., and scheres with teres, $\mathrm{\nabla} .569 \mathrm{r}$. The case of bere rhyming with woeve (from wazron), i. 9795 f., vii. 1795 f., is not an exception to the rule, being the preterite plural, from baxom.
Another group is chele, fele (many), hele (cover), stele, wele, as against hele (heal), dele, &c. : but we find hele (hälo) : hele (helan), iii. 2755 f.
Again we have ete, gete (inf, and partic.), begrte, forjete, mete (meat), sete (past partic.), kept apart from grete (great), bete (beaten), strete, tete, lete (Litan), swete (verb, = sweat), threte, whete, &c. It may be noted that bejete (subst.) belongs to the class grets, bete, &c.
There is every reason to suppose that the same distinction would hold with other endings, in the case of which no sufficient rhyme-test is forthcoming, as brebs, spebe (inf.), werehe (inf. and past partic.), which have no other words with $\bar{\ell}$ with which they could be rhymed, eke, seke, meke, \&e., all having !.

On the whole we may say that this distinction is very carefully kept in Gower's rhymes, and must certainly indicate a difference of pronunciation.

The adverb weel, also written wiel, has a double sound, as in Chaucer, either $\bar{\varepsilon}$ or $\bar{e}$, rhyming with del (diel), stiel, whiel, \&c., and also with naturel, Daniel, and the substantive wel for wele.
eg forms ei, which is often interchangeable with ai, as seie, leie, weic, azein.
O. E. i. There is nothing in Gower's rhymes to lend support to the theory that $i$ from O.E. $t$ in open syllables (i. e. before a single consonant followed by a vowel), as in the past participles write, drive, schrive, and the infinitives $3 i v e$, wite, is of doubtful quantity. The past participle and plural preterite write have $z$ and rhyme with wite (know), while the infinitive wryte rhymes with wyte (blame), verb and substantive: the infinitives live, 3 ive, forzive and the participles drive, jive, schrive, \&c. rhyme among themselves and not with schryve (inf.), alyve, fyve: the short vowel words wile (verb), skile, bile are separate from wiyle (subst.), whyle, ile, \&c. This would not be worth mentioning but for ten Brink's argument (Chaucers Sprache, $\S \S 35,325$ ), based on the very smallest positive evidence.
cherche is Gower's regular form from cirice, but chirche is common in the orthography of the Praise of Peace, e.g. 197, 210, 225, &c., beside cherche, 232, 254.
O. E. 0. wolde, scholde, golde, molde rhyme with tolde, holde, colde, \&c., but in open syllables a distinction is observed (as in the case of $e$ ) between new-lengthened $\bar{g}$ and $\bar{g}$ from O. E. $\bar{a}$, so that tofore, before, therfore, score and the participles bore, forbore, love, schore, swore are kept separate in rhyme from such words as hore, more, lore (subst.), ore, rore, sore, to which later group should be added More (Moor), and the Romance verb restore ${ }^{1}$. This distinction seems to be recognized by Chaucer, cp. Troilus, v. 2226, but with a good many exceptions, as Legend of Good Women, 452 f., 550 f., 1516 f., Cant. Tales, A 1541 f., 3237 f., \&c., chiefy, but not exclusively, in the case of more. Gower is very much stricter and allows very few exceptions (overmore : tofore, i. 3361 f., nomore : therfore, vii. $3^{279}{ }^{*}$ f., more : therfore, vii. 3869 f., more : fore, viii. 991 f.), which must be regarded as imperfect rhymes. Considering the frequency with which words of these two classes occur in rhyme, it is remarkable that the distinction should be so well kept.

We may note that bowe (subst.) from boga rhymes with words like knowe, in which ow is from äw.
O. E. u. In some words $o$ and $u$ interchange, as begonme begunne, conne cunne, coppe cuppe, dronkeschipe drunkeschipe, further forther, ronne (over)runne, sonne sunne, thurgh thorgh(soght), tonge tunge, tonne tunne, &c., but we have without variation, bole, hunger, note (nut), some, under, wonder, &c. The regular rhyme under: zuonder is enough to show that the sound was the same.
love, above rhyme together and not with any other word. (For the rhyme at v. 7047 f., see under $\overline{0}$.)
sone (from sunu), wone (custom), astone, rhyme only with one another: in the rhyme wones: ones, which occurs iv. 2217 f., viii. 6 IIf., we have to do of course with a different word.

[^13]dore (door) rhymes with spore and dore (subjunctive of dar), bole with wole (verb).
O. E. y. This is usually represented by e (except before $h, g h$ ), e. g. abegge, berie, berthe, besy, bregge, dede (did), coel, felle (also fille), felthe, ferst, fest, hell (also hill, hull), ken (also kin), kende (usually kinde), kesse (also kisse), knette, krepel, lere, lest (listen), lest (= pleases, also list), mende (also minde), merie, merthe, pet (also pitt, put), scherte, schetten, senne (also sinne), stere (stir), thenke (from byncan), werche (also worche), werse (also worse): to these must be added hedde, hed, pret. and past partic. of hyde, in which original $y$ was shortened (also hidde, hid). On the other hand, we have gilt (also gult), gultif, lifte (sky), stinten (not stenten), thinne (not thenne), theurste, wierdes. Gower does not use the forms birthe, bisy, dide (did), mirie, mirthe, stire.

The results obtained for certain words from rhymes by Fahrenberg ${ }^{1}$ are rather misleading. For example, he suggests the conclusion that fille (subst.) and fulfille are used with $i$ only, but of the nineteen instances which he quotes, all but two are in rhyme with wille, a natural combination (at least for fulfille), and one which has determined the form in most cases. Apart from this, both felle (subst.) and fulfelle are found (felle in rhyme, iii. 2609).

Again, senne is much more common than would appear from the rhymes. Fahrenberg can quote only one instance in rhyme, as against twenty-nine of sinne, but this is certainly due to the greater frequency of the words (such as beginne, winne, &c.), which give rhymes to sinne. The word occurs seven times in the Prologue, once it is in rhyme, Sinne : inne, and of the other six instances five are of senne and one only of sinne. On the other hand, hell (from hyll) alone appears in rhyme, but hill or hull are commoner forms in use.

The mistakes tell both ways, but on the whole the conclusion that $i$ is much commoner than $e$ in these words is seriously incorrect.

For the use in rhyme of the words of this class with open tone syllable, as stere, lere (from lyre), see under e.
(2) O. E. long vowels and diphthongs.
O. E. $\mathbf{\text { E }}$. The $\bar{q}$ of hom rhymes, as in Chaucer, with the $\bar{o}$ of the [^14]preterites com, nom, and also fom with nom, v. 4007. These must be regarded as imperfect rhymes, due to the want of strictly correct rhyme-words. Gower has regularly mosf (O. E. mäsf) and but once in rhyme mest (O. E. mëst), lest : althermest, i. 3101 f . : also regularly oght, noght, and oghte (verb), but tawht : awht, i. 2770, and aghte : betaghte, viii. 747.

O. E. $\overline{\text { ma }}$. This, when representing West-Germanic $\bar{d}$, Gothic $\dot{c}_{1}$ appeared as $\bar{e}$ in the Old Anglian and Kentish dialects, and might naturally be expected to be sometimes close $e$ in the language of Chaucer and Gower. It is well known that Chaucer uses many of the words which have this vowel in a variable manner.

The same is true to some extent also in words where the original $\bar{e}$ corresponds to Germanic $a i$, and in which we find Old Kentish $\bar{e}$. Of these leden, clene, menen, lecren appear in Chaucer sometimes with $\underset{!}{e}$ (and evere, nevere always). For these and some other cases see ten Brink, Chaucers Sprashe, § 25 .

When we compare Chaucer's usage with that which we find in our author, we find what our former experience has prepared us to expect, viz. a greater strictness and regularity of usage in Gower. The examples of fuctuation between the two sounds are comparatively few.

Taking first the words in which $\bar{E}$ is from $\overline{\mathcal{E}}$ corresponding to WestGermanic $\bar{\alpha}$, we find the following with it:
bode (pret. pl.), from büdon, (dede : bude, j. 2047 f.).
breth (: deft, i. I19, 21a7, Bec.).
ferr ' 'fear,' (: ©m, i. 462, ii. 46).
kery, "hair," (hervs : leres, i. 2999).
letr, from lietan, (: gnete, i. 3365, &c.).
lewed' (: thetove, i. 274, beschnewed, tii 479).
setf, pret plo, (sole : grete, iv. 1309), but sute (not in rhyme), v. 3339 .
sirefe (: grefi, i, 938, beff, 3. 1156).

(adv.) : dtory, Praise of Peace, 178.
were, from türon, (: ary, Prol. 235, i. 2808, &c.), but also in a few instances, as hien (verb) : werf, i, a74if, herr (adv.) : werm, v. 747 f.
whare (e. g. elleswhers : oere, Prol, 9), but herr (adv.) : dleswherv, v. 361 f.
The aubstantive and verb red, mede rhyme about equally with f and i, the latter cases beng almost ail with did, dede (dead, sung, and pl.), as i. I 446 , iv, 1940, 1960, &k, On the other hand, rade : hosdi, i, 447f., rede : sparde, i. 1293 f , li. Io3 f., &ce., tod : tped, 3i, 199 If .

The following word of this class bave as a ruie $\bar{i}$ :
chele (chwehe) (: murke, v. 247t, che, v. 3019).
 B55, forburder, its 1122 ), but ulede (dead): aledf, 1. 1037 £.
drouk (: mede, i. 1987, 2940', : spede, iv. 609, : hiede, iv. 1448, &cc.), but dede (dead) : drede, ii. 3405 f., drede : rode (from räad), iv. 185 f.
leche (: seche, ii. 3200, beseche, iii. 413).
meste, 'dream,' (: mecte, from metan, iii. 5I).
mete (senmete), adj. (: mete, from mitan, ii. 458, iii. 1 100).
slep, slepe, subst. and verb, (bope : slope, Prol. 309 f., 475 f., slep : kep, i. 155, $& c c$.), but slop : hop (häap), iv. 3007 f.
speche (spieche) (: seche, Prol. 174, beseche, i. 1906).
spiche (speks), from sprïcon, pret. pl. (: besehe, ii. 959, sieke, ii. 1456).
thred (: spod, i. 1419).
jer, Jere, (Jeve : sticre, ii. 9379, jer : hier, iii. 129, jecres : pleciefieres, iv. 481), with no instances apparently of e.

If we take now the words in which $\mathbb{E}$ is from $\mathbb{\Phi}$ corresponding to Germanic ai, we obtain the following results.
$\operatorname{cr}(:$ ner, ii. 2085).
geth (: deth, ii. 1804, 2616, &c.).
lene, 'lend,' (: bene, v. 4407).
leve, ' remain,' (: bervev, Prol. 4 12).
se (sce), 'sea,' (: stree, iii. 86, iv. 1715, sle, iv. 1664), but be : se, iv. 16a5f., wes : sec, viii. 1723 f.

* (jer), ' yea,' ( : slas, iii. 262, 2068, stres, iii. 668).
(stre, slex, have no è rhymes, so we have no reason to suppose, as in the case of Chaucer, that final i has a close sound.)

With $\overline{\text { f. }}$ :
areche, from dnēcan, (: beseche, ii. 666).
clene (: sene, ii. 3461).
del (diel), somdiel, &ec. (: whiel, Prol. 137, stiel, Prol. 612, 828).
rvere, nevere, (: levere, Prol. 38, ii. 5, ii. 2417 , &c.).
-hede (-hiede) as a suffix : hiede : godhicde, Prol. 497 f., cp. i. 1aII f., 1719 f., v. 595 f., viii. 95 f., mede : wommanhiede, iii. 1607 f., wommanhicde : frede, vi. 695 f., maidenhede : spede, vii. 5145 f., viii. 1419 f., and so on, but once $\overline{\text { E, }}$, Maidexhede : rede (from read), v. 5987.
hete, subst. and verb, 'heat,' (: swete, 'sweet,' ii. 2740, vi. 249), but hete : tobete, iii. raI f., hete : bete, viii. I 195 f.
lede (: hiede, v. 156, : fede, vii. $233^{* *}$ ), but dede (dead) : lede, ii. 2779 f.
leve (liere), from lēran, (: hiere, verb, i. 454, iii. 2204, v. 2029, dierr, viii. 1462, hiere (adv.), viii. 1497, unliered : stiered, Prol. 233 f.).
mene (meene), verb, (: sene, ii. 2830, iv. 1645, wene, i. 1937, &c., grene, i. 777, &c., tene, iii. 771, queene, iv. 786).
sprede (spriede) (: fede, i. 2824, spede, ii. 504, spredeth : wedeth, v. 7679 f., fredech, vi. 895 f.), but sprede : hede (head), vii. 845 f.
teche (: beseche, i. 590, 2260, iii. 132).
The above are the results arrived at by examination of the rhymes with vowels of undoubted quality; i. e. $\bar{\varepsilon}$ from O. E. $\bar{e} a$, ${ }^{1}$ According to ten Brink, nede ought to be regarded as an uncertain rhyme because of the O. E. neades beside niedes, but Gower never rhymes it with open é and $\bar{e}$ from O. E. $\bar{c}, \bar{c} o, \bar{i} e$. In addition to this, an investigation has been made of the rhyming of these words among themselves and with words of Romance origin, in the process of which some additional words with $\bar{e}$ from $\overline{\boldsymbol{e}}$, as dele, hele, swete, 'sweat,' wete, are brought in. This cannot here be given in full, but it may be said that in almost all points it confirms the results arrived at above. A few words, however, to which an open vowel is assigned above, rhyme with other words from $\overline{\boldsymbol{e}}$ which almost certainly have $\bar{e}$, and therefore must be set as having unstable pronunciation. Thus, in spite of the rhyme lene (lend) : bene mentioned above, we have lene : mene (both verb and subst.) and lene : clene, and though fere rhymes more than once with ere, we have lered : afered and unlered : afered, which suggest that the close sound was possible.

On the whole we may set down the following as the result of our examination.

With open vowel: of the $\overline{\boldsymbol{a}}(\bar{e})$ class, bede, pret. pl., breth, her (pl. heres), lete, lewed, strete: of the $\bar{a}=a i$ class, er, geth, leve (remain), zee (yea).

With close vowel: of the former class, leche, meete (dream), mete (fit), slepe, speche, speke, pret. pl., thred, wete, wreche, zer, and with one exception only in each case dede, slep: of the latter class, areche, clene, del, evere, lere, mene, nevere, teche, and with one exception in each case, -hede (-hiede), lede, sprede.

With unstable vowel: from $\overline{\boldsymbol{e}}(\vec{c})$, drede, eve, fere (fear), red (subst.), rede, there, were, where: from $\overline{\boldsymbol{e}}=a i$, hete, lene, see (sea).

The conclusions to which we are led are, first that in Gower's usage there is less instability of vowel-sound in these words than in Chaucer, the number of words with unstable vowel being smaller and the variations even in their case more exceptional ; secondly that Gower's language has a strongly pronounced leaning towards $\bar{e}$; and finally that this tendency is quite as much visible in the words of the $\overrightarrow{\boldsymbol{e}}=a i$ class as in the others.
O. E. èa. The substantive believe has ${ }_{e}^{e}$ by influence of the verb.

There is no use apparently of nēde from nead or of $3 \bar{\varepsilon} r$ from gear, and ek, eke, seems invariably to have è.

From ëage, flëah, hëah, nëah we have yhe, fiyh, hih, nyh.
There seems no reason to suppose that stre, sle had è, as has been concluded for Chaucer's language because of such rhymes as sle : he, stre : she, stree: we, see ten Brink, Chaucers Sprache, § 23.

It has already been shown that see (sea), which we have supposed to have unstable vowel quality, very seldom rhymes with words having $\bar{e}$, notwithstanding the frequent opportunity for such rhymes, and $3 e e$, 'yea,' never. It may be questioned whether the rule laid down by ten Brink for Chaucer is a sound one, and whether Chaucer's practice does not really depend simply upon the larger supply of rhymes in $\bar{e}$, such as he, she, me, thee, be, se (verb), tre, three, \&c. It is at least possible that the difference here between Gower and Chaucer arises from the fact that the latter was less strict in his rhymes, and certainly the later developments of sle, see, stre, zee supply no confirmation of the idea that they had è regularly in Chaucer's language.
O. E. ëo. By the side of sek (siek) there is occasionally sik.

The form fil, fille for fell, felle, pret. sing. and pl. from falle, are not used by Gower. He rhymes fell (fëoll) : hell (hyll) and felle, pret. pl. : felle (fyllan).
The personal pronoun 300 (30u) from ēov rhymes with thou, now, &c.
O. E. ì. Fahrenberg's instances of $\bar{i}: \bar{e}$, i. 177 f. and iii. 413 f., are both founded on mistakes.
O. E. $\bar{u}$. The personal pronoun from O. E. $\bar{u} s$ is always written ous, but rhymes in some instances with -us in Latin names, e.g. Tricolonius : ous, Tereïs : ous.
būtan is shortened to bot, not but. It occurs also as a dissyllable in the form bote.
O. E. $\overline{\mathbf{y}}$. The only example of $\bar{y}$ as $\bar{e}$ is fer from fir, which occurs in rhyme with 3er, iii. 694, (elsewhere fyr). Chaucer has fere, dat., rhyming with here, adv., Troilus, iii. 978, and also afere in rhyme with stere, 'stir,' Troilus, i. 229.

The cases of hedde, hed, pret. and past participle (from hydan), are examples of shortened $\tilde{y}$ passing naturally to $e$, and so also fest from fyst, felthe from fylbe, threste from $b$ ryista.

From $\bar{g} g$ in drige we have dreie, but also drye.
O. E. $\overline{0}$. Gower, like Chaucer, rhymes the word do (misdo, undo, \&c.), and occasionally to in therto, with words that have $\bar{\ell}$ derived from $\bar{a}$, not only so, also, two, wo, but also tho, adv. (i. 2609, iii. 683, v. 533 I, \&c.), go, ago (ii. 2483, 3513, iv. 116I, 3465,

GOWER'S ENGLISH WORKS

v. $5173,8 \mathrm{c}$.), overmo (i. 2385), no (v. 4776), fo (iv. 3407). These words also thyme with proper names, such as Juno, Lichto, Babio. The other forms of $d o$, as dorh, dom, thyme nearly always with $\overline{0}$, but once we have doth : goth, v. 3967 f., and once dow: anon, v. 3627 f. The rhyme soth : goth also occurs, v. 1579 f. This latter class of thyme, as don: anom, dun: gon, sothe: bethe, soth : wroth, occurs frequently in Chaucer's earler work, as the Book of the Duthess, but much less so in the later.

These rhymes, like those of hom with com, Src., noticed above under $\bar{u}$, are to be explained as due to scarcity of exactly corresponding thyme words. The only exact rhyme for $d o$ and $t 0$ is in fact sihoo, which is found in Prol. 356, but obviously could not be of frequent occurrence. The explanation given by ten Brink, Chaucers Sprache, § 31, and repeated mechanically by others, is that certan words which have $\bar{g}$ from $\bar{a}$, as wo, two, so (swu), may equally have $\bar{\rho}$ upon occasion owing to the influence of w. This is shown to be wrong both by the fact that the rhymes in question are, as we have seen, by no means confined to these words, and by the absence of other evidence in the case of wo and so that they ever had a tendency to $\bar{e}$. The fact that the rhyme $d o: s o$ is by far the commonest instance is due simply to the more frequent accasion for using the words.

In the rhyme giove: lore, v. 7047 f., we have to deal with $\hat{o}_{1}$ and there can be no question here of love from lufian. Both sense and rhyme point to a verb loze corresponding to the substantive lif or love, mod, Iuff, and signifyng the action of bringing a ship's head up nearer to the wind. The other rhymes used with glove are behove, Prol. 357, frove, ini. 2153.

We may note that wowe from zogian rhymes with bowe (bagan), Which does not fit in with ten Brink's very questionable theory about the development of on (ont), Chauters Sprache, §46, Anm.
(3) Romance Vowels. A few notes only will be added here to what has already been said in the Introduction to Gower's French Works.

Words with -otn (-on) ending, as condicioun (-on), opinioun (-on), &c., riyme only among themselves or with toun, doun, &cc. There are no rhymes like Chaucer's proporcion: upon, and it is to be noted especially that the rhyming of proper names in on, as Sahimon, Acteon, Scc., with the class of words, which is very common in Chaucer, does not occur in Gower's English, though we occasionally find it in his French. At the same time the possibility of such rhymes cannot be denied, for we have toun : Ylioun, v. 7235 f, and Lamedon: Jasoun, v. 7197 f.

Adjectives in -ous do not rhyme with -us, as in Chaucer Aurelius : amorous, Theseiis : desirous.

The terminations arie, -orie are not used at all, but instead of them the French forms -aire, -oire, as adversaire, contraire, recessaire, gloire, histoire, memoire, purgatoire, victoire. Latin proper names in orhyme with $\bar{g}$, as Cithero (: also), Leo (: also), Phito (: tho), Juno (: so, tho), \&c., but also in several cases with do. There seems no sufficient reason to suppose, as ten Brink does, that they regularly had $\bar{o}$.
(4) Consonants. The termination -liche (-lich) in adjectives and adverbs, which Fahrenberg judging by the rhymes sets down as very uncommon compared with $-l y$, is by far the more usual of the two. It is true that -ly occurs more frequently in rhyme, but that is due chiefly to the greater abundance of rhyme words corresponding to it, e. g. forthi, by, cri, merci, enemy: we have, however, redely : properly, Prol. 947 f. The general rule of usage is this: -ly usually in rhyme (but besiliche : swiche, iv. 1235 f.), and before a consonant in cases where the metre requires a single syllable, as i. 2069, 'Al prively behinde his bak' (but frendlich, viii. 2173), -liche or -lich before a vowel, as i. 373, 'That ronne besiliche aboute,' cp. ii. 1695, v. 1247, and -liche of course where two syllables are required, as i. 1035, 'Was thanne al openliche schewed,' so ii. 918, iv. 57 , and compare also iii. 2065 f.,

> 'Unkindely for thou hast wroght, Unkindeliche it schal be boght.'

But in Prol. 719 we have only before a vowel,
' Noght al only of thorient,' though onliche occurs in a similar position, i. 1948, and onlich, iii. 42. Again, 9 Ir,
'And sodeinly, er sche it wiste,' but Prol. 503,
'Al sodeinliche, er it be wist,'
cp. iv. 92 I, compared with i. 1336.
The treatment of the O.E. spirant $h(=x)$ deserves some attention. This occurring before $t$ is recognized as having in M. E. a palatal or a guttural sound, according to the nature of the preceding vowel, but the texts of our period usually give it as gh in both cases. Gower, however, makes a distinction, writing almost regularly alihte, briht, dihte, fihte, fihte, kniht, liht, miht, mihte, niht, riht, sihte, wiht, heihte, sleihte, &c., but aghte, caghte, straghte, boghte, broghte, noght, oght, oghte, soghte. Occasionally however in the first class we find $g$, as rarely bryghte, lighte, more frequently heighte, sleighte, and pretty regularly eighte; and there are several words in the second which have variants with $h$, but in these cases $w(u)$ is inserted, as cawhte, strawhte, dowhter (doukter), owhte: otherwise $u$ is generally absent, as we have already seen. The form referred to is commoner with the vowel $a$ than with $o$.

It is hardly necessary to repeat here that plit is a word of Romance origin, and rhymes properly with delit, appetit, not with liht, niht, &c., being separate in etymology from O. E. pliht.

From the fact that there is no rhyming of $-i$ iht with $-i t$ either in Gower or Chaucer, we may certainly gather that the sounds were somewhat different; but the fact that Gower does not usually write $g h$ after $i$ indicates, no doubt, that in this case the sound of the spirant was less marked than when preceded by broader vowels.

Where O.E. $h$ is a final aspirate, $g$ is not usually written, as sih, hik, nik, howik, lowh, plowh, slowh, ynowoh, except in the case of thogh, but very occasionally we find such forms as drogh, plogh. In the words which have $w(u) k$ is often dropped, as in bowes, low, slow (preterites), ynow.

จ. Inflexion.-(i) SUbstantives. In a certain number of words there is variation in the matter of final e: thus we have drink drinke, lock lacke, lyf lyoce, wym myne, quecue queen, sor sore, wel wele. will wills, wymdow wermotore, to which must be added many words with the suffixes -hatc, hode, -schipe, and the termination -inge, eg.
 inching( $\delta$ ), troding ( $\delta$ ), wrormg ( () ). In these latter cases the presence of the e ending is not wholly dependent on the accent, for we have Anntins: i 359 , but hinetyang, ir. 2439, tocikyng and rechinge both equally in rhyme, i. 1592, V. 611. gitilaidije, ii 3128, knithid, v. 2057, frikailiA ii. 121\%. Acrent however has some influence, and it is hardly cunceivable that the final oshould count in the metre except where the accent falls ow the preveding swluble. so that where the acreat is thruwn back, wo dind that the word is regulaty followed by a ruwel. Ia the onse of the (Enytisth) rermination ore the final e is usually written : such words are beggere, forthdrawere, kindreve, ledere, lovere, makere, repere, spekere, writere. This -e, however, is eithes elided or passed over in the metre (as with janglere, v. 526), unless an accent falls on the termination, in which case it may be sounded, as vii. 2348, 'The Sothseiere tho was lief.'

The forms game, gamen appear side by side both in singular and plural, as i. 347, vi. 1849, viii. 680.

As regards the oblique cases we note the following genitive forms: cherche, herte (also hertes), hevene, ladi, soule, sterre (pl.), wode (also wodes), to which add dowhter (also dowhtres), fader (also fadres), moder. In the expressions horse side, horse heved, &c., horse is genitive singular.
The $\rightarrow$ termination of the dative appears in a good many prepositional phrases: to (in) bedde, in boke, to borwe, be (to) bote, with (of) childe, unto the chinne (but unto the chin, i. 1682), be daie, to (fro) dethe (also fro deth), of dome, on (under) fote (but upon the fot, at his fot), on fyre, to (upon) grounde, fro (unto) the grounde (also fro the ground), on hede, at (fro) home (also at hom), in (on, upon) honde, to (into) honde, (but 'bar on hond,' be the hond), on horse, to horse, to (in, of) house (but in myn hous), to (into) londe, be (in, over) londe, of (out of) londe, fro the londe, (but of his lond, \&c.), be lyhte, to lyve, to manne, to mowthe, be mowthe, be nyhte (also be nyht, and regularly at nyht, on nyht, a nyht, to nyht), to rede, be (to, into, out of) schipe (also to schip), to scorne, to slepe (also to slep), to toune, to wedde, to wyve, to zere, be zere.
In the plural we have hors, schep unchanged, and also with numerals, mile, monthe, pound, zer (beside zeres), wunter. The plural of thing is thinges, sometimes thinge, not thing. Mutation plurals, feet, men, teeth, wommen. Plurals in -en, brethren, children, oxen (also oxes), ton, yhen.
The forms in -ere have plurals -ers, as janglers, kepers, lovers. From maiden we have beside maidens also maidenes (three syllables), iv. 255, which is perhaps the true reading in Chaucer, Leg. of G. Women, 722. From angel we have plural anglis, iii. 2256, as well as angles, and Nimphis, v. 6932, but there are few examples of plural in $-i s$.
With regard to Romance substantives Gower appears to be stricter than Chaucer in preserving their form. He gives us regularly beste ' beast,' feste, requeste, tempeste. We have however baner (also banere), host, maner, matier (beside manere, matiere), press (beside presse), travaile, conseile (substantives) very occasionally for travail, conseil.
Several distinctively feminine forms are used, as capitcine, chamberere, citezeine, cousine, enemie.

In some cases the Latin inflexion is introduced, as Tantaly, Apollinis, Centauri,in Cancro, Achillem, Esionam, Phebum, the two last apparently introduced after the first recension.

 GOWER'S ENGLISH WORKS(2) Adjectives and Adverbs. A few adjectives vary as regards final e in the ununflected form, for example ech eche, lick liche, lows lowe, many manye, morst maste, old olde, other othre, such swihe (?), trewe trew, wommanyssh wommannyshe.

In comparative forms $-\epsilon$ is often dropped, as fairer, further, longer, wither, songer, but more often written, as furthere, deppere, ferre. gladilere, grellere, lengere, valthere. This $-\varepsilon$, however, is either elided or passed over in the metre (as ij. 503, iv. 1459, vi. 1490, 1525, 2010). Where there is syncope of the penultimate, as after $v(u)$ in levere, the final ecounts regularly as a syllable, so that in case of elision the word is reduced to a monosyllable, which never takes place with rathere, furthere, \&ic.

When adjectives or adverbs ending in weak e are combined with a suffix or another word, $-\epsilon$ is often dropped; thus we have everemere eiermore, furthermore, joieful joiful, hevencly heventy, treively, trewly (so also (rewmant), and so on. In such cases a previously syncopated penultimate ceases to be so on loss of the following $e$.

A few cases occur of -id for -ed in adjective endings, as nakid (also naked), wickid wotkkid' (usually wicked), also hundrad (usually hundred).

The definite form is used pretty regularly in the case of English monosyllabic adjectives, and usually also in monosyllables of French origin. This rule applies (1) to adjectives used after the defnite atticle, a demonstrative pronoun or a possessive ; (2) to those employed as vocatives in address; (3) to adjectives in combination with proper names or words used as proper names '. Thus we have regularly (1) 'the grefe hert,' 'the stronge coffre, 'The quike body with the dede.' 'this proude vice,' 'this songe lord,' 'my lunge wo,' 'his luse tunge," 'thi fulle mynde,' 'whos mhie name,' &c. (2) 'O derke ypocrisie,' 'O goode fader,' ' heve Sone,' & c. (3) 'grete Rome,' 'Blunde Avarice,' 'proude Envie' (but 'prowd Envie,' Prol. 712), 'faire Eole,' 'stronge Sampson,' 'wise Tolomeüs,' &c.

We must note also the inflexions in the following expressions, 'so hthe a love,' i1. 2425 (but hth, vii. 2413), '50 grete a wo,' v. 5737, so grete a lust,' v. 6452, 'so schorle a time,' vii. 5201.

With Romance adjectives we find 'bis false tunge,' ' the plicine cas," 'false Nessus,' &c., and so usually in monosyllables.

In the case of English monosyllables the exceptions are few. 'His full answere,' i. 1629 , 'hire good astat,' i .2764 , 'here wrong condicion,' ii. 295, ' his s/yh compas,' ii. 2341 (but 'his slyhe cast,' ti. 2374), 'the fers' of hem,' $\mathrm{ni} .27, \mathrm{v} .2863, \mathrm{cp} .5944$ (usually 'the ferste,' as i. 580, \& C. .), 'my riht hond,' iji. 300, 'the trew man,' nit, 2346, 'his hig lygnage,' iv. 3064 (due perhaps to the usual phrase ' of hih lignage '), 'the luh prouesse,' v. $6428^{*}$, 'hire hilh astat,' V. 6597 , 'the gret oultrage,' vii.

- This latter rule explains Chaucer's use of the inffected forms fatre. firsshe, &cc., in 'fresshe Beaute," gode, farre White,' 'fresshe May; & c.

Among Romance adjectives the want of inflexion is more frequent in proportion to the whole number of instances, e.g. 'the vein honour,' Prol. 221, 'the fals emperour,' Prol. 739, 'Hire clos Envie,' ii. 684, &c.
In the case of adjectives of more than one syllable, whether English or French, the definite form is exceptional. The commonest case is that of superlatives, in which the definite form -este is regularly used when the accent falls on the termination, whether in rhyme or otherwise, as faireste, i. 767, v. 7427, slyheste, i. 1442, wiseste : myhtieste, i. 1097 f., wofulleste, vii. 5017 . Even when the accent is thrown back, the definite inflexion is more usually given than not, as faireste, i. 1804, hoteste, i. 2492, treweste, ii. 1282, povereste, iv. 2238, heyeste, vii. 935, but sometimes dropped, as 'the purest Eir,' Prol. 92I, 'the 3ongest of hem,' i. 3133, 'the lowest of hem alle,' vii. 224: in all cases, however, where the accent is thrown back, the adjective is followed by a word beginning with a vowel, so that the metre is not affected.

Other adjectives of which the termination is capable of accent may take the definite inflexion, when the accent is thrown on the termination, as 'the covoitouse flaterie,' 'this lecherouse pride,' this tyrannysshe knyht,' but on the other hand 'his fals pitous lokynge,' 'the pietous Justinian,' 'the proude tyrannyssh Romein,' and cases where the adjective is used as a substantive, 'the coveitous,' 'This Envious,' 'thaverous,' &c. We have 'the parfite medicine,' iv. 2624 (but 'the parfit Elixir,' iv. 2522, with accent thrown back), and ' O thou gentile Venus,' viii. 2294; but perhaps parfite, gentile are to be regarded as feminine forms, as almost certainly devolte, i. 636.
Where the final syllable of the adjective is incapable of accent, there is ordinarily no question of a definite inflexion, except where there is syncope after $v(u)$, as in evele. Such words are croked, wicked, cruel, litel, middel, biter, dedly, lusti, sinful((), wilful, woful( $)$, wrongful, and we may note that comparatives in -ere and adjectives in -liche (with accent thrown back) sometimes appear in the truncated form of spelling even where a definite termination is suggested by their position, e.g. 'hire songer Soster,' v. 5395, 'hir goodlych yhe,' ii. 2026, ' Ha , thou ungoodlich ypocrite,' v. 6293, 'hire dedlick yhe,' vii. 5089 (-lich in these latter cases to avoid the hiatus of 'ungoodly ypocrite,' &c.). As an exceptional instance the form nakede should be observed, ' his nakede arm,' iv. 421, given so both by F and S.

The formation of plurals in adjectives and participles used attributively is governed by the same principles. We have 'preciouse Stones,' iv. 1354, but 'the most principal' (pl.), v. 1115. In the expression 'the chief flodes,' v. ill2, chief must be considered perhaps as a substantive, like hed in ' the hed planete.' Naturally words like wicked, woful, lusti, &c., take no plural inflexion, but we have manye (manic) beside many apparently as a plural form, though manye also occurs in the singular, and enye once as plural of eny. In the expression 'som men' som is without inflexion in the plural, e.g. Prol. 529, iii. 2113, but 'somme clerkes,' Prol. 355, 'some thinges,' i. 1265.

Adjectives used as predicates or in apposition are to some extent treated according to convenience of metre or shyme, but in the case of monosyllables there is a decided preference for inflexion. The following are some of the instances: 'Whan we ben dedie,' Prol. 2, 'hem that weren goode,' 42, 'my wittes ben to smale,' 81 , 'Ther ben of suche manie glade,' 299 , ' become grete,' 303 , 'ben with mannes senne wrothe,' 920, 50 blande, i. 774, smale, 1145 , glade, 115 I , hyhe, smale, i. 1678 f ., hore and whyte, i. 2045, sirenge, iij. 1112 , dulle, iv . 947, whyle, fatte. grele, iv. 1310, \&c. We have also 'hise thoghtes fente,' iv. I18, 'thinges . . . veine,' i. 2689, 'hise bedes most devoute'' i. 669 , 'in wordes so coverte,' iv, $\mathbf{5 0 6 6}$, wher the men ben covertouse, v .4800 .

On the other hand, 'Of hem that ben so derk withinne,' i. 1077, 'Hire chekes ben with teres wef,' i. 1680, 'Thei wexen doumh,' iv. 345, 'Here bodies weren long and smal,' iv, 1320, ' Thei weren gracious and wys,' vii. 1447, 'thei weren glad,' viii, 881 , and so frequently.

The participle used as predicate is ordinarily uninflected, but there are a few examples of a plural form adopted for the rhyme, as made, Prol. 300, ansuerte, i. 3246 , iv. 2343 , Assde, v. 6789.

The usage of al, alle as an adjective is in some ways peculiar, but tolerably consistent. In the singular before an article, a demonstrative pronoun or a possessive, the uninflected form al (occasionally all) is used, as 'al the baronie,' 'al the world,' 'al his welthe,' 'all his proude fare,' 'al a mannes strengthe' (also 'the Cite all,' ii .3473 ), but before a substantive the form alle (dissyltable)', as 'alle grace,' 'alle thang,' 'aile untrouthe,' ' alle vertu,' ' in alle wise,' ' in aile haste,' 'alle wel,' 'alle charite,' but sometimes before vowels $a /$, as 'al honour," i. 879, 'al Erthe,' i. 2825, 'al Envie,' ii. 168, "al untrowthe,' ib , 1684 . In the plural, 'al the,' 'all these,' 'alle the,' &c. ('alle' beng counted as a monosyilable), and without the article, 'alle' (but 'al othre,' iv. 1533).

Note also the adverbial expression 'in nome wise,' cp. ' othre wise.' In cases of the combination of a French adjective with a feminine substantive of the same ongin the adjective occasionally takes the French feminne form. Instances are as follows: 'devolte apparantie,' i. 636 , 'verne gloire,' i 2677 ff., 'vertu sozeremse,' ii, 3507 , 'seinte charite,' $1 v$. 964, ' herbe sovereine,' vii. I 39z, ' joie sovereine,' viii. 2530 , and even as predicate, 'Dame Avarice is noght soletne,' V. 1971. Possibly also, [^15]' O thou divine pourveance,' ii. 3243, 'the parfite medicine,' iv. 2624, 'a gentile . . . on,' v. 2713, and 'O thou gentile Venus,' viii. 2294, may be examples of the same usage.

There is one instance of the French plural adjective in -s, Prol. 738, evidently introduced for the sake of the rhyme.
(3) Pronouns. The personal pronoun of the first person is regularly $I$, not ich. It is usually written $y$ by the copyist of the last 235 lines of the Fairfax MS. and in the Praise of Peace.

The third person sing. fem. is sche (never written she), once scheo: the oblique case is hire, hir (never here), and hire, though usually equivalent to a monosyllable, sometimes has -e fully sounded, as i. 367, iv. 766, v. 1178.

The third person neuter is $i t$, seldom hit.
In the first person plural the oblique case is ous, not shortened to us in spelling.

The possessives of the first and second persons sing., min, thin, have no plural inflexion, but the disjunctive form thyne pl. occurs, i. 168. On the other hand his, originally an uninflected form, has usually the plural hise, •but sometimes his. The form hise is never a dissyllable.

The feminine possessive, 3rd pers., is hire or hir, freely interchanged and metrically equivalent. There is no question of a plural inflexion here, and we find 'Hire Nase,' 'hire browes,' 'hir lockes,' 'Hire Necke,' quite indifferently used, i. 1678 ff . The disjunctive is hire, v. 6581, and hires, v. 6857. The forms oure, 3oure are usual for the possessives of the ist and $2 n d$ pers. plur., and these are commonly used as monosyllables, e. g. i. 2062, 2768, and interchanged with our, 30 ur ; but they are also capable of being reckoned as dissyllables, e.g. Prol. 5, iii. 1087. Here again there is no plural inflexion (' $30 u r$ wordes,' iii. 627). The disjunctive 30 ures occurs in i. 1852.

The possessive of the 3rd pers. plur. is here, her, which is practically never confused in good MSS. with hire, hir of the fem. sing. ${ }^{1}$ We are fully justified in assuming that for Gower the distinction was absolute.

The ordinary relatives are which and that: who is little used as a relative except in the genitive case, whos. The plural whiche is usually pronounced as a monosyllable, as ii. 604, iv. 1496, v. 1320, and often loses $-e$ in writing, as Prol. 1016, iv. 1367, 1872, v. 4041, but also sometimes counts as a dissyllable, e.g. i. 404, vii. 1256.

In combination with the definite article the singular form is 'the which,' not 'the whiche,' as Prol. $71,975$.

^16 Verbs. In the Infinitive and Gerund, apart from the cases of $d o, g o, s e, s l e, & c$., few instances occur of the loss of final e. The verb sein (sain) has seze and also say, and beside the regular infinitive pute we have also put in several instances, the next word beginning uith a vowel or mute $h$. The cases are as follows: 'And thoghte put hire in an Ile,' i. 1578 , 'To put his lif,' &c., i. 3213 , 'put eny lette,' ii. 93. and so also ii. 1021 , ini. 1166 , jv. 756,2615, v. 273 , viii. 892 : but also, 'It oghte pute a man in fere,' i. 462, 'To pulen Rome in full esperr,' ii. 1551, 'Theucer pute out of his regne,' iii. 2648, &cc. In addition to the above there are a few instances of the same in other verbs, as 'get hire a thank,' ij. 60, 'It schal noght wel mow be forsake,' ii. 1670, 'flulf his herte aside,' iv. 214, 'lel it passe,' vini. 2056. (In vi. 202 , 'If that sche wolde 3if me leve,' we ought perhaps to read अave with S : cp. i. 1648.)

The gerund 'to done' is common, but we do not fand either 'to sene ' or 'to seine.'

Present Tense. In the ist pers. sing. of the present, apart from such forms as do, go, \&c., and frai beside preie prate, there are a few cases of apocope, as in the infinitive: 'Than cast $\mathrm{I}^{\prime}$ ' iv. 560 , 'let it passe,' iv. 363 , 'I put me therof in your grace,' i. 732 , 'I put it al,' v. 2951 , ' 1 red thee leve,' v. 1359, 'Nou theak 1'' vij. 4212. In two of these instances it will be noticed that the following word begins with a consonant.

In the 3rd pers. sing. the syncopated and contracted forms are very much used by Gower. He says regularly bit, etf, get, put, schet, set, sit (2nd pers. sist), smit, whtt ; arist, bint, fimt, holl (halt), lest, went, wext; berth, brekth, bringth, crith, drawth, drinklh, falth, farth, forsakth, leith, lyth, preith, spekth, lakth (or tath), Bhenkth, itflh, and only occasionally draweth, drinketh, fareth, ketpeth, sittesh, wetarsh, ecc. In vi. 59 the best MSS. agree in giving sterte for sferf, and in viii. 2428 most have sitte for sif, but these are probably accidental variations. For the 3rd pers. plural Fahrenberg (p. 404) quotes several supposed instances of thending. Of these most are expressions like 'men seith;' where 'men' is used as singular indefinite. One only is valid, viz. vii. 1107 , 'Diverse sterres to him Iongeth ': cp. vii. 536 .

Preterite. With regard to the tense formation of Strong Verbs reference may be made to the Clossary, where all the characteristic forms are recorded. We confine ourselves here to a few remarhs.

The following instances may be noticed of gradation between the singular and the plural of the preterite: began, pl. begunne begonne, g.on, pl. gannen, san, pl. runne, zuan, pl. womme, bond, pl. bownien, fond, pl. fownden, song (sang), pl, songre sunge, sprong, pl. spronge sponensen, drank (drenk), pl. dranke, bur, pl. bere (beere), brak, pl. orjeken, spak, pl. spicke, sat, pl. sche( $n$ ) siete( $n$ ) seche, bad, ph. bedr, pl. riden, ches, pl. chose, and among preterite-presents can, pl. conne, max, pl. mowe, schal, pl. schulle schull schol, wot, pl. wite.

There are some few instances in $\mathbf{F}$ of strong preterites with irregular - termination in the 1st or 3 rd pers. singular, but in no case is this authenticated by metre or rhyme. The following are examples in which F and S are agreed,' schope a wile,' v. 4278, 'he bare him,' v. 5236, 'which sike his Soster,' v. 5810, 'lete come,' vi. 1186 , 'he tho toke hire in his arm,' viii. 1732. These are perhaps mistakes, and they have sometimes been corrected in the text on the authority of other MSS.

The 2nd pers. sing. has the -e termination, as sihe (syhe), iii. 2629, iv. 599, were, iv. 600, knewe, vi. 2313, come, viii. 2076, but tok, i. 2421. The 2nd pers. sing. of the preterite-present mai is regularly miht (myht), never 'mayest.' Occasionally the best MSS. give it as mihte, e.g. i. 2457, vii. 2637,3819 , but there is no metrical confirmation of this form. The preterite plural is very rarely found without $-e$, as v. 3300, 7534, vii. 3574

Among Weak Verbs those which have the short or syncopated form keep the -e termination almost regularly. Such preterites are, for example, aspide, cride, deide, leide, obeide, payde, preide, seide, teide, hadde, made, brende, sende, answerde, ferde, herde, solde, spilde, tolde, wende, betidde, dradde, fedde, fledde, hedde, gradde, ladde, radde, spedde, spradde, crepte, duelte, felte, herite, kepte, kiste, lefte, lepte, loste, mente, slepte, wente, wepte, alihte, caste, dihte, grette, knette, kutte, laste, liste, mette, plyhte, putte, schette, sette, sterte, triste, arawhte, broghte, cawhte, oghte, roghte, schryhte, soghte, strawhte, tawhte, thoghte, wroghte, cowthe, dorste, mihte, moste, scholde, wiste, wolde.

At the same time it must be noted (as in the case of the infinitive) that with some of these forms there is an occasional tendency to drop the -e before a vowel at the beginning of the next word (that is, where elision would take place), and the agreement of the best MSS., especially $F$ and $S$, makes it certain this was sometimes done by the author. It is impossible to trace any system, but the number of verbs affected is not large, and in nearly every case the instances of this kind of elision-apocope are largely outnumbered by the examples of normal inflexion in the same verb ${ }^{1}$.

The following is a tolerably full list of references for these preterite forms, which are given in alphabetical order: 'Beraft hire,' v. 5647, 'it betidd upon the cas,' vii. 4381, 'Sche cast on me,' i . 152, 'cast up hire lok,' v. 5436, 'he cast his lok,' vi. 1035, 'dorst he,' ii. 1633, 'drad him,' viii. 1368,

 eschuie,' int. 1356, and sis also jit. 1440, vil. 4285, 'Pu' under,' Prol. 683. "Wan and put under, Prol, 738, 'He put hem into,' i, tor3. 'Sche put hare hand,' i, 1807, and so also ii. 3267, v. $3045,4088,5326,6409$, vi. 3063, vis. 4402 , vili. $270 z_{1}$ 'thei pult hem,' v. 7417. 'Of ous, that schald ous,' Prol 543 (so SF) 'schold every wys man,' 11.578 , 'And setd hir,' ו. 3188, 'Send ek,' v. 4309, 'And set hare,' 11. 2020, 'He sel him,' v. 36 g r, 'he set an essmmplare,' vin. 4262, 'And tawht hem $50^{\prime}$ ('tawhte' S), 11. 176, 'fold him,' i. 3187, 11. 803,
 ' every man went on his syde,' v. 7403, 'And went hem out ' pl.), v. 7533. 'sche uist it," נi. 2oto, 'thanne wold J,' i. 183. 'and mold have,' v. &217. 'I wold stele,' v. 7137, 'wold I," vil, 2998, to which we may add 'myths obeie;' and 'behight hmm' from the Prase of Peace, 39, 41.

Of these examples it is to be remembered, first that in only one case, - I wold stele, v. 7137 , does this apocope take plare before a consonant, though in one other natance, v. $5^{86} 5$, the followng word begins with an aspirated $h$; and secondly, that with all these, except perhaps put, the fill form of the preterite is that which usually occurs before a sowel as well as elsewhere. Even in the case of fut we have the form putle frequently when it is subject to elision, as Prol. 106g, 'And putte awey malencolte,' and so ii. 713,9684 , iv. $399,1368,8 \mathrm{ke}$, as well is regularly before a consonant, as 'With strengthe he putte kinges under,' i. 2797. The form puff oecurs in v. 74 I 7 , and in thas case the verb is plumal. The only other mastances of plurals in the list are Prol. 543 and v. 7533.

With regard to the weak verbs which form preterites with ending -ede, the loss of the final $e$ is somew hat more common, but it is usually retained, and sometimes tt counts as a syllable in the verse. Where this is not the case, it is either el cled in the usual wry, or if it be dropped in writing, th.s is only under the cond.tions which apply to the verbs mentioned above, namely, before a sowel at the beginning of the succeeding word.

It is, however, noteworthy that the use of these forms, whether in -etie or eed, is decidedly rare, and was avoided by our author even m cases where the ee would have been subject to elision. It is evident that he was always conscious of this ending, even if he did not always write it, and yet he feit that the two weak syllables ought not to have full value in the metre. The result was that he avoided the use of the form generally, so far as it was rensonably possible to do so. The whole number of these preterites in-eide, ed to be found in the Confessio Amantas is surprisingly small, both actually and relatively, that is, taking account of the extent to which the verbs in question are employed in their other tenses. The method pursued is chicfly to substitute in narrative the present tense, or the perfect formed with 'hath,' for the 3rd person singular of the preterite, 'Conforteth ' for 'Confortede,' 'Hath axed ' for 'axede,' ' feigneth ' for 'feignede,' and this apparently as a matter of habit and even in cases where a vowel follows. No doubt the use of the present tense in narrative is quite usual apart from this, but the extremely frequent combination of strong or syncopated preterites with the present tenses of verbs of this class seems to me to indicate clearly how the matter stood.

The following are a few of the examples of this: 'For sche tok thanne chiere on honde And clepeth him,' i. 1767 f., 'The king comandeth ben in pes, And . . . caste', 3240 f., 'Comendeth, and seide overmore,' 3361, 'he him bethoghte, . . . And torneth to the banke ayein,' ii. 167 ff ., 'for hem sente And aseth hem,' 613 f., 'lay . . . clepeth oute . . . sterte,' 848 ff., 'Sche loketh and hire ghen caste,' 1066, 'This child he loveth kindely . . . Bot wel he sik . . . axeth . . . seide,' 1381 ff., 'Sche preide him and conseileth bothe,' 1457, 'Which someth outward profitable And was,' 2201 f., 'And he himself that ilke throwe Abod, and hoveth there stille,' iii. 1232 f., and so on.

These examples will serve to illustrate a tendency which every reader will observe, when once his attention has been called to it. There are indeed many narrative passages in which nearly all the strong or syncopated verbs are used in the preterite, and all the others in the present, and it is evident that this cannot be accidental ${ }^{1}$.

There are, however, a certain number of instances of the use of weak preterites, indicative or subjunctive, and a few in which the final $e$ (or -en) is sounded in the metre.

The following are examples of eede preterites (in one instance -ide): 'I wisshide after deth,' i. 120, 'he passede ate laste,' 142, 'he hem stoppede alle faste,' 522, 'And warnede alle his officiers,' 2506, 'Mi ladi lovede, and I it wiste,' ii. 502, 'he axede hem anon,' 1248, 'he rounede in thin Ere,' 1944, 'Bot he hire lovede, er he wente,' 2027, 'Thogh that he lovede ten or tuelve,' 2063, 'Supplantede the worthi knyht,' 2453, 'Sche pourede oute,' iii. 679, so also iii. 1631, 2556, iv. 468, 825, 842, 934, 1340, 1345, 1444, 'Lo, thus sche deiede a wofull Maide,' iv. 1593, 'it likede ek to wende,' 2150, 'Controeveden be sondri wise,' 2454, 'Translateden. And otherwise,' 2660, 'And foundeden the grete Rome,' v. 904, ' He frignede him,' 928, 'And clepede him,' 951 , 'He percede the harde roche,' 1678, 'Thei faileden, whan Crist was bore,' 1697 , 'Thei passeden the toun,' 2182, 'Alle othre passede of his hond,' 3258, 'Welcomede him,' 3373, 'walkede up and doun' (pl.), 3833, 'axede him,' 5 129, so also 5774, 6132, 6791, 6887, 'oppressede al the nacion' (pl.), vi. 568, 'That loveden longe er I was bore,' 882, 'he usede ay,' 1207, 'exilede out of londe,' 2348, 'Enformeden,' vii. 1495, 'Devoureden,' 3346, 'Ensamplede hem' (pl.), GOWER'S ENGLISII WORKS444,' Restorade hem; 4445, so also 463a, 4986, 4992, 4998, &c, 'Eschw.wicw to make assay,' viii. 373 , "With love curastlede and was overcome,' saqo.

This list of examples, which is fairly complete up to v. 1970, will sufficiently show the manner in which -ede preterites are used. In more than three-fourths of the instances quoted the $-e$ is subject to elision. and of those that remain mine are examples of the plural with -twitw fermination, and three only of the ending -ede, viz. ji. 2063. 'Thogh that he lovede ten or tuelve, 'ii. 2453 , 'Supplantede the worthi knyht," and $v .1678$, 'He percede the harde roche,' of which the first is really a case of syncope, 'lov'de,' as also 41.202 (cp. vi. 882) and iv. 1593 , whereas in i1. 2027 'lovede' occurs unsyncopated but with $-e$ elided. It will be noted that in the plural the form -eden is used regularly when the syllables are to be fully pronounced, though ede can be used for the sake of elision.

The ed form of preterite is less frequent than the other, and I am not aware of any clear example of its employment before a consonant or in rhyme. We have, for example, 'And wsed it,' i. 342 , 'Sche cleped him, $^{\prime}$ i. 1535 ('Aumbicd him,' $\mathrm{i}, 2065$, is probably a participle, 'to have humbled himself'), 'pryded I me,' i. 2372, 'ne figmed I;' ii. 306t, 'the goddes . . . Comanded him,' 11. $2140 \mathrm{f.}, \mathrm{"Thei} \mathrm{cleped} \mathrm{him,'} \mathrm{v}. \mathrm{876}$, cp. 1057, \&c. In 11. 1759 , "The Gregois forncat fro the siege,' we have most probably a participle, 'were torned.' We may observe that the -ed form stands also in the plurat.

Among weak preterites from originally strong verbs we may notice abreide, creple (but past participle crope), fighte, fletdde, schotte, slepte (also sicp, uith past participle slipce), smat/c (beside smot), wepte. The pret. salie in vis. 2282 , "He satte bim thanne doun,' seems to anse from confusion of 5 at and settc.

Imperative. The Confessio Amantis is peculiarly rich an inperatives. Beside the regular imperative singular forms, e.g. ared, besch, bekold, ches, com, do, forsuk, gried, help, heer, hyd, kep, lef, ly, lej, lest, lep, prei, pul, say, schrif, spik, tak, tell, thenk, unterstoml, jif, &ic, the MSS. give us also hyile, ili. 1502 , seie, vii. 4084 , speke, vil. 5422, Jake, iv. 2674, v, 6429, thenke, ini. 1083 , but not in such positions as to affect the metre. The forms axe, horkme, loke, whe are regular, but lok also occurs (i. 1703, v. 1220).

In some instances the short form of imperative seems to be used as 3 rd pers.g eg, 'hold clos the ston," v. 3573, for "let him hold,' "tak in his minde," viii. $\mathbf{t} 128$, for "let him take,' cp. viii, 1420 . The singular and plural forms are often used without distinction, as $v, 2333 \mathrm{ff}$. . 'Ches . . . snd woiteth . . . ches and fak . . . goth . . . taketh', v. 3986 , 'So help me nou, I you beseche,' with 'Helpelh;' just above, several persons being addressed, and so 'triketh hiede And ke's conserl,' vin, 1509f., to one person. In the intcrchange of speech between the Confessor and the Lover, wlile sometimes the distinction is preserved, the Confessor saying tak, tell, understond, and the Lover telleth, axeth (e.g. i. 1395, 1875), at other times the Lover says lest, say, tell, lef, \&c. (i. 1942, 1972, ii. 2074, iii. 84I, \&c.) ${ }^{1}$.

Prement Participle. The form of the present participle is the most characteristic part of Gower's verb inflexion as compared (for example) with Chaucer's. Chaucer seems regularly to have used the form in -inge (often with apocope -ing): Gower uses ordinarily the form -ende, and normally with the accent thrown on the termination, as i. 204, 'To me spekende thus began,' 236, 'Whos Prest I am touchende of love,' 428 , 'Stondende as Stones hiere and there,' 633, 'So that semende of liht thei werke,' 1379 f. ., 'That for I se no sped comende, . . . compleignende,' 1682, 'Hangende doun unto the chin.'

Sometimes the same form is used with accent on the preceding syllable, and in this case the $-e$ is systematically elided, e. g. Prol. ni, ' In tyme comende after this,' 259 , 'Belongende unto the presthode,' i. 296, 'As touchende of my wittes fyve' (cp. 334, 742), 3025, 'And wailende in his bestly stevene.'

In a relatively small number of instances the form -inge occurs either in rhyme, as i. 524, 'So whan thei comen forth seilinge,' in rhyme with ' singe,' i. 1710, 'And liveth, as who seith, deyinge', in rhyme with ' likynge' (subst.), or with the accent thrown back, as i. 115, 'Wisshinge and wepinge al myn one,' v. 518 , 'Abidinge in hir compaignie,' vi. 717, 'I mai go fastinge everemo'; rarely out of rhyme and with accent, as i. 2721, 'Mi fader, as touchinge of al.'

The final $e$ is never lost in writing, but when the accent is thrown back it is always elided.
Past Participle. The -id termination of weak past participles is very rarely found in the Fairfax MS., except in the concluding passage, which is copied in a different hand from the rest. It occurs commonly in the Praise of Peace. Examples found elsewhere in F are weddid, iv. 650 , medlid, iv. 1475.

From setten besides the regular past participle set there appears the form sete twice in rhyme, vii. 2864, for3ete : sete, and viii. 244, misgete (past partic.) : upsete. This seems to be formed after the analogy of gete. On the other hand we have ferd, i. 445, &c., but also fare(n), iii. 2692 , v. 3797 , &c. The past participle of se is sen, sein, seie, but most commonly sene. In a few instances a final $e$ is given by the MSS. in weak past participles, e.g. herde for herd, v. 4231, schope for schop, v. 4278, sette for set, vi. 10, wiste for wist, viii. 37.

The cases of weak past participles with plural inflexion (e.g. Prol. 300 , i. 3246 , iv. 2343, v. 6789) have already been mentioned in dealing with adjectives.
${ }^{1}$ Except in the case of these imperative forms the and pers. plur. is quite consistently used by the Lover in his shrift, and the and pers. sing. by the Confessor in reply.

c.AX

There is hardly any use of the prefix $y$-( $i-$ ), but we have goore, ii. 499 .
i. Dialect. Gower's language is undoubtedly in the main the English of the Court, and not a provincial dalact. Making allowance for the influences of literary culture and for a rather marked conservatism in orthography and grammatical inflexions, we can see that it agrees on the whole with the London speech of the time, as evidenced by the contemporary documents feferred to by Prof. Morsbach. At the same time its tendencies are Southern rather than Midland, and he seems to have used Kentish forms rather more freely than Chaucer. This is shown especially ( 1 ) in the more extensive use of the forms in which e stands for O. E. j; as serne, kesse, per, hell, \&C.; (2) in the frequent employnsent of ie, both in French and Englash words, to represent $\bar{e}$, a practice which can hardly be without connexion with the Kentish cliene, diepe, diere, hier, hield, niede, \&c. ; (3) in the use of ende as the normal termination of the present partic.ple. (The Ayendife regularly bas inde.) Probably also the preference shown by Gower for the close sound of $\bar{\varepsilon}$, from O. E. $\bar{c}$, may be to some extent due to Kentish influence. Other points of resemblance between the language of Gower and that of the Aycnbite (for example) are the free use of syncopated forms th the 3 rd pers. sing. of verbs and the regular employment of ous for $u s$.
vii. Metre, &c. The smoothness and regularity of Gower's metre has been to some extent recognazed. Dr. Schipper in Englische Mctrik, vol, i. p. 279, remarks upon the shill with which the writer, uhle preserving the syllabic rule, makes his verse fow always so smoothly without doing violence to the natural accentuation of the words, and giving throughout the effect of an accent verse, not one which is formed by counting syllables. Judging by the extracts printed in Morris and Sheat's Specimens (which are taken from MS. Harl. 3869 , and therefore give practically the text of Fairfax 3), he observes that the five princrpal licences which he has noted generally in the English verse of the period are almost entirely absent from Gower's octosyllabics, and in particular that he meather omists the first utaccented 5 ) llable, as Chaucer so often does (e. g. ' Be it rouned, red or songe,' Hous of Fame, ii. 214, 'Any lettres for to rede,' iii. 51, 'Of this hill that northward lay,' iii. 62), nor displaces the natural accent (as 'Of Decembre the tenthe day,' Hous of Fame, i. III, 'Jupiter considereth wel this, ii. 134, 'Rounede everych in otheres ere,' iii. 954), nor slurs over syllables.

To say that Gower never indulges in any of these licences would be an exaggeration. Some displacement of the natural accent may be found occasionally, even apart from the case of those French words whose accent was unsettled, but it is present in a very slight degree, and the rhythm produced does not at all resemble that of the lines cited above from Chaucer: e. g. i. 2296, 'Wher that he wolde make his chace,' 2348 , 'Under the grene thei begrave,' 2551, " "Drink with thi fader, Dame," he seide.' Such as it is, this licence is nearly confined to the first foot of the verse, and is not so much a displacement of the natural accent of the words as a trochaic commencement, after the fashion which has established itself as an admitted variety in the English iambic. We may, however, read long passages of the Confessio Amantis without finding any line in which the accent is displaced even to this extent.

Again, as to slurring of syllables, this no doubt takes place, but on regular principles and with certain words or combinations only. There are hardly more than three or four lines in the whole of the Confessio Amantis where a superfluous syllable stands unaccounted for in the body of the verse, as for example, > iv. 1131, 'Som time in chambre, som time in halle,' > v. 447,' 'Of Jelousie, bot what it is,'

> v. 2914, 'And thus ful ofte aboute the hals,' > v. 5011, 'It was fantosme, bot yit he herde.'

The writer seems to have no need of any licences. The narrative flows on in natural language, and in sentences and periods which are apparently not much affected by the exigencies of metre or rhyme, and yet the verse is always smooth and the rhyme never fails to be correct. If this is not evidence of the highest style of art, it shows at least very considerable skill.

In Gower's five-accent line, as exhibited in the Supplication of viii. 2217-2300 and in the poem In Praise of Peace, Schipper finds less smoothness of metre, 'owing perhaps to the greater unfamiliarity and difficulty of the stanza and verse ' (Englische Metrik, i. 483 ff.). His examples, however, are not conclusive on this point. Some of the lines cited owe their irregularity to corrup-

cxxii GOWER'S ENGLISH WORKS

uons of text, and others prove to be quite regularly in accordance with Gower's usual metrical principles.

For instance, in vini. 2220 the true text is 'That wher so that I reste or I travaite,' which is a metrically perfect line. Again, in the Praise of Peace, 1. 79, 'And to the heven it ledeth eiz the weie,' it is impossible, according to Gower's usage, that 'heven' should stand as a dissyllable. He wrote always 'hevene,' and the penultinate was syncopated. So also 'levere' in 1.340 , 'evere,' 1. 376 . Hence there is no 'epic caesura' in any of these cases. Nor again in l. 164, 'Crist is the heved,' can 'heved' be taken as a dissy tlable in the verse: it is always metrically equivalent to 'hed.' The only fair instance of a superfluous syllable at the caesura is in 1.66 ,
'For of batale the final ende is pees,"
It seems that the trochee occurs more commonly bere than in the short line. Such examples as Schipper quotes, occurring at the beginning of the line,

> 'Axe of thi god, so schalt thou noght be werned,'
> 'Pes is the chief of al the worldes welthe," are of the same character as those which we find in the octosy?labics. Perhaps, however, a difference is afforded by the more frequent occurrence of the same licence in other parts of the verse, as,
'So that undir his swerd it myth obeie,' 39 .
The rbyming on words like 'manhode,' 'axinge,' $\& c_{\text {., }}$ is in accordance with the poet's general usage.

On the whole, the combination of the syltabic and the accentual system is effected in the five-accent line of these stanzas almost as completely as in the short couplet; and in his command of the measure, in the variety of his caesura, and the ease with which he passes without pause from line to line and rounds off the stanza with the matter, the author shows himself to be as fully master of his craft upon this ground as in the more familiar measure of the Confessio Anantis.

As regards the treatment of weak syllables in the metre, Gower's practice, in accordance with the strict syltabic system which he adopted, is very different from Chaucer's. The rules laid down by ten Brink, Chuucers Sprache, $\$ 260$, as to the cases in which weak final $e$ is never counted as a syllable in the verse, except in rhyme, require some qualification even when applied to Chaucer (for example, 'sone' is certainly a dissyllable in Cant. Tales, A 1963 , Hous of Fame, i. 218), and they are almost wholly inapplicable to Gower, as we shall see if we examine them. (a) Gower has the forms hire, oure, zoure, all occasionally as dissyllables apart from special emphasis or rhyme. ( $\beta$ ) these, some, whiche are all sometimes dissyllables. ( $\gamma$ ) The strong participles with short stems as come, drive, write as a rule have the final $e$ sounded. ( $\delta$ ) The $\epsilon$ of the 2 nd pers. sing. of the strong preterite may be sounded, e. g. iii. 2629 (but ' Were thou,' iv. 600). (c) The form made, both singular and plural, regularly has er sounded, were (pret.) usually, and wite sometimes. ( $\zeta$ ) sone, wone, schipe (dat.), and the French words in $-i e(y e), \& c$., have -e regularly counted in the metre : so also beste, entente, tempeste. ( $\eta$ ) before, tofore, there are used in both ways.

Gower's usage with reference to this matter is as follows:
The personal and possessive pronouns hire, oure, joure, here and hise (as plural of his), written also hir, our, &c., are as a rule treated as monosyllables. We have however ' Fro hire, which was naked al,' i. 367, 'And thenke untoward hire drawe,' iv. 559, so v. 1178, 2757, vii. 1899, &cc., 'In oure tyme among ous hiere,' Prol. 5 (but ' Oure king hath do this thing amis,' i. 2062), ' As ze be zoure bokes knowe,' iii. 1087, cp. v. 2951 (but 'Bot, fader, of joure lores wise,' i. 2768). Add to these alle (pl.) before definite article.

In the following words also the final $c$ is sometimes suppressed for the verse : these (also thes), Prol. 900, 1037, i. 435, ii. 237, &c. (but these, v. 813, ir27, vii. 1005, &c.) : whiche plur. (also which), ii. 604, iv. 1496, &c. (but whichë, i. 404, v. 1269, vii. 822, 1256, &c.) : eche (also ech), v. 6883, according to F, cp. Prol. 516 : there (usually ther), viii. 23 II, 2689 (but therë, iii. 1233, &cc., and often in rhyme) : were pret. ind. or subj. (also wer), iii. 1600 , iv. 600, 1657, 1689 (but more usually werë, as Prol. 1072, iii. 762, v. 2569, vii. 4458): where (usually wher), v. 4355 (but where, v. 2720): more (also mor), ii. 26, v. 2239, 6207, vii. 3237 (but morë, Prol. 55*, 640, iv. 2446, vii. 3287, &c.) : before, tofore (also befor, tofor), i. 2054, 2864, iii. 2052 (but before, Prol. 848, and often in rhyme) : foure, vii. 2371 (but fouri, ii. 1037, iv. 2464) : fare (wel), iii. 305, iv. 1378 (but fariwel, v. 4218): sire, i. 2878 , ii. 2995 (but siré, v. 3547, 5593) : wite, ii. 455 (but wite, v. 3150, 3445) : wole (also wool), v. 2891, 2911, &c.: bothe, ii. 1966, a154, iv. a138, &c. (but bothé, Prol. 1068, i. 851, &c.) : wolde (also wold), v. 4413 (usually woldë) : come, ii. 789, iv. 2826 (but comé, pp. iv. 1283, vi. 1493, vii. 4840, inf. viii. 1362) : some, pl. subst., iii. a112, v. 2252 (but somé, i. 2034 ff.) : have, Prol. 708, i. 169, 2724, ii. 550, iv. 1600 (but havé, ii. 332, iv. 1598) : love, subst. iv. 930, vi. 126i (but lovē much more often, e. g. i. 103, 251, 760, &cc.): tuelve (also tuelf), iv. 1983 (but tuelvë, vii. 1005) : trewe (also trew), v. 2877 (but trewei, pl., Prol. 184, def., iii. 2228) : mowe, inf. (also mow), iv. 38 : seic, inf. and ist s. pres. iii. 1737, iv. 672, v. 2616, 6428, &cc. (but seic often) : preic, tst s. pres. (also prat), v. 453t (but perte, v. 3230 : fiethem, forthere also fwrther, forther), 11i 81,885 : kengere (also kenger), i. 1516, ii. a602: rathery also palher), ul. 503, vii. 4 161, viti, a141: jarg/ere, v. 526 ; also some isolated case5, as abonte, v 2914, Take, v. 7169 , Minolante, v. 5327 ,but Minotaure, 52gi, sec.), Theophite, vil, 1500 .

In iv. 113 I, $\nabla .447,5011$, wheh we have quoted above, the superfluous syllable in each case may be connected with the passe in the sentence, as in Altour de l'owone, 10633 , ' L'un ad franchise, l'autre ad servage.'

Syncope (so far as regards the metre) regularly takes place it the following : covere (discovert, \&c.), delivere (but not deliverance, i. ${ }^{1584}$, v. 2657 ), equene, evere, fievere, havene, hevene, levere, netere. povere, sezcne (also sefne), swevene (also swefne), and some othee words of a similar kind, to which add heved, evel, dewel. In these cases a final $\varepsilon$ is always pronounced unless elided, and in case of elision a word like hevene, nevere is reduced to a monosyllable, as
'This world which evere is in balance.'
The following also are sometimes syncopated: lovedc, denueden. ii. 502 , vi. 882 , but without syncope ii. 2027 , beloved, i. 1928, beloued, i. 1920 f., behurely, behovelich, iii. 1330, V. 4012 , vii. 1949 (but unbehovely, viii. 2884), leveful, v. 7053, Azeril, vii. 1029, sozerein, vii. $177^{6}$ (but usually three syllables, as Prol. 186, i. 1609 , and sovereinete, five sy llables, i. 1847), amorous, iii. 745 (but usually thrce syllables, as i. 1414), fader, ii. $2387, \mathrm{cp}$. fodre, if. 2519 (but ordinarily a dissyllable), unkendeli, ii. 3124 (but urkindely, iii. 2065), comelieste, comelshicde, v. 3048, 6734 (but comcly, i1. 441), namely, viii. 304 r , also namty, ii. 47 (but usually three syllables, as Prol. 144, iii. 63), Termesjis, Iv. 2408. We may note, however, that this kund of syncope is less used by Gower than by Chaucer, and that chivalerie, chizalerows, foreward, foretokne, loviduy, pilegrin, surguiderie, \&c., are fully pronounced.
Unaccented t before weak ether fina! or in inflexions has the force of a semi-vowel, and forms no syllable of itself: so sfudte, cane, fane, chrou, wiene, wanke, 8 cc . are equivalent to dissyllables, and are reduced by elision to the value of manosyilables, as Prol, 393, 'To studte upon the worldes lore,' i, 459, 'To tarte with a mannes thoght,' i. 3238 , 'And marge it hielden for Solic,' 11. 8648 , Thei carm thl the come at Karre'; and so also in the other parts of the same words, $e_{0} g i_{1}, 1645$. And thus he taneth long and late, and in plurals like bodtrs, iv. 2463. Simularly Mercurse is made into a dissyilabie by clision, 'And ele the god Mercume also,' i. 42a. Akin to thas in treatment is the frequent combination many a, many an, counting as two syllables (so "fal many untrewe," V . s8&6), but many on, varsion as three. We may note also the case of sfafme, Prol. 8gt, 'As I tolde of the Statue above, which is reduced by eltstion to a monusyllable.

Elision of weak final e takes place regularly before a vowel or an unaspirated h. We must observe that several classical proper names ending originally in $\bar{e}$, as Alceone, Daphne, Progne, Phebe, have weak $e$ and are subject to elision, and under this head it may be noted that Canace rhymes to place, whereas Chaucer (referring to Gower's story) gives the name as Canacee, in rhyme with he. Also the combinations byme, tome, tothe, \&c., have weak $\epsilon$ and are elided before a vowel.

An aspirated $h$ prevents elision as effectively as any other consonant. We have 'min holë herte,' 'gretë hornes,' 'Cadmë hyhte,' 'Mi Sonë, herkne,' 'proprë hous,' 'fastë holde' (and even 'othrë herbes,' iv. 3008); but there are some words in which $h$ is aspirated only when they are emphatic in sense or position, as have, hath, he, him, hire, hou', &c. For example, elision takes place usually before have, he, how, but not so as a rule in cases where they are used in rhyme or with special emphasis, e.g. i. 2542, 'Of such werk as it scholde have,' ii. 2479, cp. v. 7766, 'Wenende that it were he,' iv. 3604 , 'And al the cause hou it wente.' On the other hand, the preterite hadde seems to have an aspirated $h$ even in unemphatic position, as ii. 589, 'The Sceptre hadde forto rihte': compare vii. 2364, 'Victoire hadde upon his fo,' with vii. 2392, 'Thogh thou victoire have nou on honde.' Elision also takes place before hierafter, though not before hiere.

There is one instance of hiatus, viii. rio, 'That he his Sone Isaäc,' and it may be noted that the same thing occurs with the same name in the Mirour, 12241, 'De Isaak auci je lis.'

> The article the regularly coalesces with a succeeding word beginning with a vowel or mute $h$, as thaffecioun, thalemans, thamende, thapostel, thastat, theffect, themperour, thenvious, therbage, therthe, thexperience, thonour, thother, thunsemlieste, thyle, &c. The exceptions, which are very few, are cases of special emphasis, as i. 3251, 'The Erthe it is.' Similarly the negative particle ne with a succeeding verb beginning with a vowel, as nam, naproche, mis (but ne have), and also occasionally with some words beginning with w, forming nere, nost, not, nyle, nyste, &c. In some few instances to coalesces with the gerund, as tacompte, teschuie.

There is diaeresis regularly in such proper names as Theseïs, Peleüs, Tereïs, and also in Saül, Isaäc. We have Moises usually, but Moises (dissyllable), iv. 648, Thaise usually, but Thaïsis in the epitaph, viii. 1536. One example occurs affecting the -ee termination, viz. Caldeë, v. 78ı (usually a dissyllable), so Judeë, Galileë in Mirour, 20067, 29239. This is an essentially different case from that of degrees, which is found in Chaucer. The termination isus is usually dissyllabic, but vii. 2967 . 'The god Mercurius and no man.' The endings -ioun, -ious, -ien, &c., are always fully pronounced.

As regards accent, it has been already observed that the natural accent of words is preserved far better in Gower's verse than in Chaucer's. There are, however, a number of words of French origin, of which the accent was unsettled, and also some instances of English words in which a secondary syilable was capable of receiving the princıpal accent, either in case of composition, as in kingdom, knhthode, treweliche, or with a formative termination, as that of the superlative, faivisfe, &c., or the present partsciple, as zeepende. In such cases the accent was often determined by the metre. Many Romance words are quite freely treated in the matter of accent, as for example folic, fortune, mercy, mirour, nature, parfit, preiere, resoun, science, sentence, tempeste. The terminations -hode, -hede, -inge, -liche, -ly, -nesse, -schipe are all capable of accent, and also the penultumate syllables of anstuere and felawe.

Nearly all that is important about rhyme has already been said under the head of Phonology. We may here remark on some of the instances in which the form of words is accommodated to the rhyme, these being sometimes cases where variants are supplied by neighbouring dtalects. Thus we have aise for ese, ar for er, hair for heir, naghs once for noght, fer once for fyr, hade, with the original long vowel, for hadde, geth (the originally correct form) for goth, fore for for ; and alternatives such as moneie monoie, aweie autey away, seide saide, soverein soveratn, are used in accordance with the rhyme, though it is difficult to say for certain in all cases whether there was difference of sound. Thus, while we have away as rhyme to day, awey is found rbyming to ey, i. 2545, said, saide rhyming with paid, Maide, while seide rhymes with alleide, oleide; we find sovercin: azein, but brayn : severain. The form $y$ he often varies to $f e$ when in rhyme with -ie termination, as clergie : ye, Prol, 329 f., je : agonic, i. 967 f. (but also $y^{\text {he }}$ : pourparfie, i. 405 f., yhe : specifle, i. 571 f.). Sometimes however the other rhyme-word is mod.fied to correspond to it, as pryhe: $y h c$, v. 469 f., and there was probably no perceptable difference of pronunciation in this case. So also the preterite lowh is written low when in rhyme with now, Prol, 10\%1, and similarly thow : ynow, vii. 2099 f. (but bowe : ynowhe, ii. 3225 f.). We have already seen that the use of such alternative forms as sinne senne, wile wole, lasse lesse, hedde hidde, ende -inge is sometimes determined by the rhyme.

Alliteration is used by Gower in a manner which is especially characteristic of the new artistic style of poetry. It is sufficiently frequent, both in formal combinations, such as 'cares colde,' 'lusty lif,' 'park and plowh,' 'swerd or spere,' 'lief and loth,' 'wel or wo,' 'dike and delve,' 'slepe softe,' 'spille . . . spede,' and as an element of the versification:

> i. $886 \mathrm{f} . \quad$ 'For so, thei seide, al stille and softe iv. 2590 ' The Anubus hire wolde awake.' iv. 3384 f. 'Which many a man hath mad to falle, V. Wher that he mihte nevere arise.' v. 3670 f. 'And thanne he gan to sighe sore, (And sodeinliche abreide of slep.' vii. 3468 f. 'Sche hath hir oghne bodi feigned, For feere as thogh sche wolde flee.'

But it is not introduced in accordance with any fixed rules, and it often assists the flow of the verse without in the least attracting the attention of the reader. We do not find any examples of the rather exaggerated popular style which Chaucer sometimes adopts in passages of violent action, e.g. Cant. Tales, A 2604 ff. The whole subject of alliteration in Gower has been carefully dealt with by P. Höfer in his dissertation, Alliteration bei Gower, r890, where a very large number of examples are cited and classified; and to this the reader may be referred.
viii. Text and Manuscripts. About forty manuscript copies of the Confessio Amantis are known to exist in public or private libraries or in the hands of booksellers, and probably there may be a few more in private possession, the existence of which has not yet been recorded. As the broad lines for their classification are necessarily laid down by the fact that the book was put forth by the author in several different forms, it is necessary, before proceeding further, to say something about this matter.

That the poem exists in at least two distinct forms, characterized by obvious differences near the beginning and at the end, has been matter of common knowledge. Even in Berthelette's edition of 1532 the difference at the beginning was noted, and though the printer did not venture to devate from the form of text which had been made current by Caxton, yet he gave in his preface the beginning of the poem as he found it in his manuscript. 1r. Pauli accordingly proceeded on the assumption that there were two normal forms, one having a dedication to Richard II at the beginning and a form of conclusion in which mention is made of Chaucer, and the other with a dedication to Henry of Lancaster and a conclusion in which Chaucer is not mentioned. Copies which do not conform to these standards are for him simply irregular. He is aware of the additional passages in Berthelette's edition and in the Stafford MS., and in one place he speaks of three classes of MSS., but he does not know that there are any written copies except the Stafford MS. which contain the addutional passages. If he had had personal knowledge of the manuscripts at Oxford and at Cambridge, instead of being satisfied to gather scraps of information about the furmer from Bodley's Librarian and about the latter from Todd, he would have found the passages in question also in MS. Bodley 294 at Oxford and in the Trinity and Sidney MSS. at Cambrudge.

There are then at least these three classes of manuscripts to be recognized even by a superfictal observer, and we shall find that the more obvious differences which have been mentioned are accompanied by a number of others of less importance. The first recension accordng to our ciassification is that in which the conclusion of the poom contans praises of Riclard II as a just and beneficent ruler and a presentation of the book for his acceptance '. The second has the addutional passages of the fifth and seventh books, with a rearrangement of the stxth book which has not hitherto been noticed, while the conclusion of the poem has been rewritten so as to exclude the prases of the king, and in some copies there is also a new preface with dedication to Henry of Lancaster. The third exhbibits a return to the form of the first as regards the additional passages, but has the rewritten preface and epilogue. Aganst this merely threefold division some objections might farly be made. It might be pointed out that the so-called sccond recension includes at leas? two distinct forms, and moreover that upion further examination [^19]we see reason to divide the manuscripts of our first recension into two main groups, one exhibiting an earlier and the other a later text, this last being more in accordance generally with that of what we call the second and third recensions than with the earlier form of the first. For practical purposes, however, the division which has been laid down above may fairly be adopted. As regards the order of time, from the political tendency of the differences between them it is clear that what we call the first recension logically precedes the third. The intermediate position of the second is given chiefly by the fact that one of the seven existing manuscripts gives the earlier form of preface, and this may also have been the case with two others, which are defective at the beginning ${ }^{1}$. However, as has been said, the name is used for convenience to cover a class of copies which, as regards the character of their text, do not all belong to the same period, and they must be looked upon as representing rather a concurrent variety of the first or the third recension ${ }^{2}$ than as a type which is distinctly intermediate in order of time. At the same time the smaller variations of text exhibited by these seven MSS. in combination, as against all others ${ }^{3}$, mark them as really a family apart, more closely related to one another than to those that lie outside the group.

For the sake of clearness the manuscripts are in this edition regularly grouped according to this classification, and in the critical notes each class is cited by itself. At the same time it must not be assumed that the manuscripts of each recension stand necessarily by themselves, and that no connexion is traceable between one class and another. On the contrary, we shall find that many errors in the text of the first recension appear also in some copies of the second, and even of the third. The process by which this was brought about is made clearer to us by the fact that we have an example of a manuscript which has passed from one group into another partly by erasure and partly by substitution of leaves, apparently made under the direction of the author. This is MS. Fairfax 3, which forms the basis of our text, and the handwriting of some of the substituted pages is one which may be recognized as belonging to the 'scriptorium' of the poet.

The example is a suggestive one and serves to explain several things. It makes it easy to understand, for example, how the additional matter introduced into the second recension came to be omitted in the third. The author in this instance had before him a very fully revised and corrected copy of his first edition, and this by a certain amount of rewriting over erasure and by a substitution of leaves at the beginning and end of the poem was converted into a copy of what we call the third recension, which his scribes could use at once as an authoritative exemplar. The introduction of the additional passages in the fifth and seventh books could not have been effected without a process of recopying the whole book, which would have called for much additional labour of the nature of proof-reading on the part of the author, in order to secure its correctness. This argument would apply to a book which was intended to remain in the hands of the author, or rather of the scribes whom he employed, and to be used as an archetype from which copies were to be made. If a new book had to be specially prepared for presentation, the case would be different, and it might then be worth while to incorporate the additional passages with the fully revised and re-dedicated text, as we find was done in the case of the so-called Stafford MS.

Another matter which can evidently be explained in the same way is the reappearance in some copies of the second recension of errors which belong to the first. In producing the originals of such manuscripts as these, partially revised copies of the first recension must have been used as the basis, and such errors as had not yet received correction appear in the new edition.

The assumption that a certain number of errors are original, that is to say, go back either to the author's own autograph or to the transcript first made from it, is in itself probable : we know in fact that some which appear in every copy, without exception, of the first and second recensions at length receive correction by erasure in Fairfax 3. So far as we can judge, the text of the Confessio Amantis during its first years exhibited a steady tendency to rid itself of error, and the process of corruption in the ordinary sense can hardly be said to have set in until after the death of the author. There are a large number of various readings in the case of which we find on the one side the great majority of first recension MSS., and on the other a small number of this same type together with practically the whole of the second and third recensions, as, for example ${ }^{1}$ :

We see in these examples, selected as fairly typical, that some of the variants have evidently the character of errors, while in other cases the difference of reading is due to an alternative version. The circumstances, however, of these two cases are not distinguishable, the errors are supported by as much authority as the rest, and it must be supposed that both have the same [^21]origin. If then we assume that such variations as we find (for example) in i. 3396,3416, v. $30,47,82,368,2694, \& c$. , are due to the author, as is almost certain, there can be no doubt that the form of text which is given by the group AJM in combination with the second and third recensions is the later of the two: and if the group $\mathrm{H}_{1} \ldots \mathrm{~B}_{2}$ represents an earlier type as regards this class of variation, it must surely do so also as regards the errors, which, as we have seen, stand upon the same ground in respcet of manuscript authority. As we cannot help believing that the author wrote originally ' To holde hir whil my lif may laste,' v. 82, and 'The more he hath the more he greedeth,' v. 394, so we may reasonably suppose that errors such as 'it' for 'hid,' i. 1755, 'that diere' for 'that other,' ii. 833, 'what' for 'war,' iii. 1065, existed in the copy which first served as an exemplar.

It may be observed here that in cases where revision seems to have taken place, we can frequently see a definite reason for the change; either the metre is made more smooth, as i. 1770, 2622,3374 , ii. $671,751,1763$, iii. $765,2042,2556$, iv. 234, v. $368,1678, &$ c., or some name is altered into a more correct form, as where 'Element' is changed to 'Clemenee,' iv. 985 , with a corresponding alteration of the rhyme, or the expression and run of the sentence is improved, as i. 368, 3416 , v. $30,1906,6756 ; 8 c$. In particular we note the tendency towards increased smoothness of metre which is shown in dealing with weak $e$ terminations.

It is to be assumed on the principles which have been stated that the group ERCLB2 and the other manuscripts which agree with them represent with more or less accuracy the first form of the author's text, that $\mathrm{H}_{1} Y \mathrm{YG}$ and a few more form a class in which correction and revision has taken place to some extent, but partially and unsystematically, and that AJM \&c. give us the first recension text in a much more fully revised and corrected form.

It has been already said that F was originally a manuscript of the first recension. We shall find however that it did not exactly correspond to any existing first recension manuscript. Setting aside the small number of individual mistakes to be found in it, there are perhaps about eighty instances (many of a very trifling character) in which its text apparently differed originally from that of any first recension copy which we have, and in about half of these the text of F agrees with that of the second recension. The manuscript which comes nearest to $F$ in most respects is J (St. John's Coll., Camb.), and there is a considerable number of instances in which this MS. stands alone among first recension copies in agreement with the Fairfax text. In the sixth book, for example, if J be set aside, there are at least twenty-three passages in which $F$ gives an apparently genuine reading unsupported by the first recension ; but in sixteen of these cases J is in agreement with F. It must be noted, however, that this state of things is not equally observable in the earlier part of the poem, and indeed does not become at all marked until the fifth book.

Besides variations of reading, there are in the Fairfax MS. a few additions to the text which are not found in any first recension copy. These are Prol. 495-498, 579-584 and i. 14031406, two passages of four lines each and one of six, as well as some additions to the Latin notes in the margin (at Prol. 195, i. 2705, and v. 7725), of which the first two were evidently put in later than the accompanying text. Finally, there are three other additions to the text which are found in a single copy of the first recension, MS. Harl. 3490 ( $\mathrm{H}_{1}$ ). These are i. 2267-2274, where four lines have been expanded into eight, i. 2343-2358, an interesting addition of sixteen lines to the tale of Narcissus, and i. 2369-2372. Thus in the matter of additions to the text $\mathrm{H}_{\mathrm{t}}$ stands nearer to F than AJM \&c., and in a few other passages also it is found standing alone of its recension in company with F, e. g. i. 2043, 2398, ii. 2247. This manuscript does not belong to the 'fully revised' group, but it gives the revised readings more frequently perhaps than any other outside that group.

Thus notwithstanding the differences between the first recension copies, as we have them, and the Fairfax MS. as it originally stood, we shall have no difficulty in regarding the latter as having been originally a revised and corrected copy of that recension, exhibiting a text to which tolerably near approaches are made by $A, J$, and $H_{1}$, each in its own way, though no copy precisely corresponding to it is known to exist.

Passing to the second recension, we must first repeat what has already been said, that it did not supersede the first, but existed and developed by its side, having its origin probably in the very same year, or at latest in the next. Its characteristic point is the presence of considerable additions in the fifth and seventh books, together with a rearrangement of part of the sixth. There are seven manuscripts known to me, of which three are defective at the beginning. All these (except one, which is also defective at the end) have the rewritten epilogue, one in combination with the Chaucer verses and the others without them. Of the four which are perfect at the beginning, one, namely $B$, has the earlier form of preface, and the other three, $\Lambda P_{2}$ and $S$, the later. Of the others it is probable, but by no means certain, that $T$ agreed with $B$ in this respect, and practically certain that $\Delta$ agreed with S. A more satisfactory line of distinction, which divides the manuscripts of this class into two groups, is given by the general character of the text which they exhibit, and by the insertion or omission of certain of the additional passages of which we have spoken. While some of the passages, viz. v. $6395^{}-643^{}, 7086^{}-7210^{}$, vii. $3207^{}-3360^{}$, are common to all the copies, as are also the transposition of vi. 665-964 and (except in case of $\Lambda$ ) the omission of $\mathbf{v}$.7701-7746, three of them are found in AdB'TAPs only, and are omitted in $S \Delta^{1}$, viz. v. $7015^{}-7036^{}$, vii. $2329^{}-2340^{}$ and $3149^{}-3180^{}$. Then, as regards the text generally, the five MSS. first mentioned all have connexions of various kinds with the unrevised form of the first recension, while the last two represent a type which, except as regards variants specially characteristic of the second recension, of which there may be about sixty in all, nearly corresponds with that of the Fairfax MS. ${ }^{\text {a }}$

The relations of the group AdBTAP2 with the first recension and with one another are difficult to clear up satisfactorily. Broadly, it may be said that of these $B$ represents an earlier type than the rest in regard to correction and $\Lambda$ in regard to revision: that is to say, B retains a large number of first recension errors which do not appear in the rest (sharing some, however, with $\Lambda$ ), while at the same time, in cases where a line has been rewritten B almost regularly has the altered form, though with some exceptions in the first two books. On the other hand, though it often happens [^22]that $A$ is free from original errors which appear in $B$, yet in many places where $B$ has the revised form of text $\mathbf{A}$ gives us the original, in agreement with the earlier first recension type, while in others $\mathbf{A}$ agrees with $B$ in giving the revised reading. Then again, there can be no doubt of the close connexion between $B$ and $T$, but the agreement between them is not usually on those points in which $B$ follows the first recension in error. It is as if they had been derived from the same archetype, but $T$ (or a manuscript from which $T$ was copied) sprang from it at a later stage than the original of B , when many of the errors noted in the first recension bad been corrected, while the text of the book generally was allowed to remain as it was '. Finally, the text of Ad approaches very near to a fully revised and corrected type. It very occasionally reproduces the earlier first recension, as if by accident, but seems never deliberately to give an 'unrevised' reading. It should be observed that from a point towards the end of the fifth book (about v. 6280) AdBT is a group which is very frequently found in special agreement, whereas before that point we usually find BT (or BTA) with Ad on the other side.

Passing now to the third recension, which has the preface and epilogue as in $\Lambda$ and $S$, but excludes the additional passages, we find it represented by eight manuscripts, with Fairfax 3 at their head. We have already seen that this manuscript was originally one of the first recension, and was altered by the author so as to substitute the new epilogue and the new preface. Besides these changes, fresh lines are in several places written over erasures, as $\mathbf{i .} 2713$ f., iv. 1321 f., 1361 f., \&c., the marginal date is erased at Prol. 331, and additions have been made to the marginal notes. All these alterations, as well as the points previously noted, in which $F$ originally differed from the other copies of the first recension, are reproduced in the other MSS. of the third recension.

cxsxvi GOWER'S ENGLISH WORKS

Of these remaining MSS. one is directly copied from F, and another seens to be certainly derived from the same source, though perhaps not immedrately. In the case of IIa (MS. Harl. 7184) the question of origin is not quite so simple. Its text generally seems to suggest uitimate dependence on $\mathcal{F}$, but it is very unequal as regards accuracy, and in one part it regularly follows the early first recension readings and seems to belong for the time to the ERCLB group. In addition to this it has a Latin margival note at the beginming of the Prologue, which is wanting in F . The problem is perhaps to be solved by means of the Keswick MS. This is wrtten in several hands, varying greatly in accuracy, and exactly in that place where H: seems to follow a first recensiun copy the Keswick MS. is defective, having lost several leaves. It also contains the marginal note referred to above, and on examination we find that a whole series of corruptions are common to the two MSS. There seems to be very little doubt that $K$ is the source of $\mathrm{H}_{\mathrm{s}}$, the inequality of the latter MS. being to a great extent in accordance with the change of hands in K , and the variation of Hs in a portion of the third book to a different type of text being exactly coincident with the gap left in $\mathfrak{k}$ by loss of leaves, a loss which must apparently have taken place in the first forty or fifty years of its existence '. As to the text of $K$ itself, in the parts which are most carefully written it reproduces that of $F$ with scrupulous exactness, glving every detail of orthography and punctuation, and for the most part following it in such small errors as it has. It is impossible for one who places these MSS. side by side, as I have been abie to do, to avoid the conviction that in some parts at least the exemplar for K was the Faurfax MS . itseff. On the other hand, the Latin marginal note at the beginning was derived from some other copy, and setting astde the many mistakes, which possibly are due to mere carelessness on the part of some of the scribes, the Keswick MS. does undoubtedly contain some readings which seem to be derived from a different source. In form of text generally it corresponds exactly wuh F, reproducing all the addtions and corrections made by erasure or otherwise, and containing the same Latin and French pieces in the same order at the end, so far at least as it is perfect. The Magdalen College MS. must be derived ultumately from the same
I K belongs to the beginning and H to the middle of the fifteenth century.

CONFESSIO AMANTIS. TEXT cxxxvii

source as $\mathrm{H}_{3}$, and it has the same lapse from the third recension to the first, coinciding with the gap in the Keswick book. On the other hand W , though in form of text it corresponds with these and with $\mathbf{F}$, is quite independent of the group above mentioned, and probably also of the Fairfax MS. It is late and full of corruptions, but in several instances it assists in the correction of errors which appear in F, and it is apparently based on a copy which retained some of the variants of the earlier text still uncorrected.

As for the remaining manuscript, which was formerly in the Phillipps collection, but is now in the hands of a bookseller, I have had so little opportunity for examining it that I ought not to attempt a classification.

Reviewing the whole body of authorities, we can recognize readily that two are pre-eminent as witnesses for the author's final text, that is to say, S and F, the Stafford and the Fairfax MSS. These are practically identical in orthography, and, except as regards the characteristic differences, which sufficiently guarantee their independence, exhibit essentially the same text, and one which bears the strongest marks of authenticity. Both are contemporary with the author, and it is perhaps difficult to say which best represents his final judgement as to the form of his work.

The Stafford MS. seems to be the earlier in time, that is to say, it probably precedes the final conversion of the Fairfax copy. It was evidently written for presentation to a member of the house of Lancaster, perhaps to Henry himself before his accession to the throne. It was doubtless for some such presentation copy that the preface was rewritten in 1392-3, with the dedication to Henry introduced into the English text, while most of the other copies issued during Richard's reign probably retained their original form. If we suppose that the new forms of preface and epilogue were at first intended only for private circulation, we can account for the very considerable preponderance of the first recension in regard to the number of copies by which it is represented, and also allow sufficient time for the gradual development of the text, first into the type which we find in A or J , and finally into that of $F$, as it originally stood, a process which can hardly be satisfactorily understood if we suppose that from 1393 onwards the Lancastrian dedication had its place in all copies put forth by the author. It seems on the whole probable, for reasons to be stated afterwards, that the final conversion of F (that is as regards the preface) did not take place until after the deposition of Richard, and it is reasonable enough to suppose that copies were usually issued in the original form, until after that event occurred.

Manuscripts. The following account of the MSS. is given on my own authority in every detail. I have been able to see them all, and I wish here to express my thanks to the possessors of them, and to the librarians who have them in their charge, for the readiness with which they have given me the use of them. I am indebted especially to the Councils of Trinity College and St. John's College, Cambridge, and to Corpus Christi, Wadham, Magdalen, and New College, Oxford, for allowing their MSSt to be sent to the Bodleian Library for my use, and to remain there for considerable periods. Except in the case of one or two, to which my access was limited, I have examined every one carefully, so that I am able to say (for example) to what extent, if at all, they are imperfect. They are arranged as far as possible in accordance with the classes and groups to which they belong, as follows:

First Recension.

(a) Revised.
A. Bodley 902, Bodleian Library (formerly Arch. D. 33, not in Bernard's Catalogue, 1697). Contains Confessio Amantis followed by 'Explicit iste liber' (four lines), 'Quam cinxere freta,' and 'Quia vnusquisque.' Parchment, ff. 184, measuring $13 \frac{8}{8} \times 9 \frac{1}{8}$ in., in quires of 8 with catchwords. Well written in double column of 46 lines in three different hands of early fifteenth cent., of which the first extends to the end of the second quire (ff. 2-16), the second from thence to the end of the tenth quire (ff. 17-80), and the third from f. 81 to the end. The columns nearly correspond with those of the Fairfax MS. up to f. 8 I , after which point some attempt is made to save space by writing the Latin verses in the margin. Latin summaries in the margin, except very occasionally, as on ff. 10 and 11 vo. Floreated half border in fairly good style at the beginning of each book except the fifth, and one miniature on f. 8, of the Confession, remarkable for the fact that the figure of the Lover is evidently intended as a portrait of the author, being that of an old man and with some resemblance in features to the effigy on Gower's tomb. The Confessor has a red stoie, which with his right hand he is laying on the penitent's head, much as in the miniatures which we have in C and L . The note for the miniaturist still stands in the margin, ' Hic fiat confessor sedens et confessus coram se genuflectendo.'
The first leaf of the book is lost, and has been supplied in the sixteenth cent. from Berthelette's second edition. It should be noted that this is not the form of commencement which belongs properly to the MS., being that of the third recension, taken by Berthelette from Caxton. The first line of f. 2 is Prol. 144.
As to former possessors, we find written on the last leaf 'Anniballis Admiralis dominicalis,' on f .80 ' Be me Anne Russell' (?), and on f. 115 'Elyzebeth Gardnar my troust ys in god,' all apparently sixteenth cent. The first name is evidently that of Claude d'Annebaut (also called d'Hannybal), who was Admiral of France, and died in 1552 . He was in England about the year 1547 . The book came to the Bodleian from Gilbert Dolben, Esq., of Finedon, in Northamptonshire, in the year 1697, and not being in the Catalogue of 1697, it has to some extent escaped notice.

The text is a very good one of the revised type. It should be noted, however, that while in the earlier books AJM &c. stand very frequently together on the side of $F$ as against the rest of the first recension, in the later, and especially in the seventh and cighth, AM &c. have an increasing tendency to stand with the first recension generally, leaving J alone in support of the corrected text. In the earlier books $A$ sometimes stands alone in this manner, as i. 1960, ii. 961, 1356.

The orthography (especially that of the second hand) is nearly that of $F$. As regards final e, the tendency is rather to insert wrongly than to omit. Punctuation agrees generally with that of $F$.
J. St. John's Coll., Camb. B i2. Contains the same as A. Parchment, ff. $214,12 \times 9 \frac{1}{2} \mathrm{in}$., in quires of 8 with catchwords: double column of 39 lines, written in a very neat hand of the first quarter of fifteenth century. Latin summaries usually omitted, but most of them inserted up to f. 5 (Prol. 606), and a few here and there in the fifth and seventh books.
The first page has a complete border, but there are no other decorations except red and blue capitals. Old wooden binding.

The seventh leaf of quire 12 ( $\mathrm{v} .57-213$ ) and the first of quire 14 ( v . 1615-1770) are cut out, and a passage of 184 lines is omitted in the first book (i. 631-814) without loss of leaf, which shows that the manuscript from which it was copied, and which here must have lost a leaf, bad the normal number of 46 lines to the column.

Various names, as Thomas Browne, Nicolas Helifax, J. Baynorde, are written in the book, and also 'John Nicholas oweth this book,' with the date 1576. At the beginning we find 'Tho. C. S.', which stands for 'Thomas Comes Southampton.' The book was in fact bought with GOWER'S ENGLISH WORKSothers by Thomas Wriothesiey, Earl of Southampton, from Wilh,rm Crashaw, Fellow of St. John's College, and presented by him to the College Library in the year 1635 .

Thes MS. gives a text which is nearer to the type of $F$ than that of any other first recension copy. In the later books especially it seems often to stand alone of its class in agrcement with $F$, as $v .649,112, \times 339,157^{8}, 3340$, 4351, 4643. $5^{22}$ 2, 6059, 646x, 6771, vi, $162,442,784,973,2089$, vit. 445. 1097, $1666,2424,3235,4336,5348$, v14. $13,239,747,845,1076,1415,1456$ f., 2195, 2220, 2938, $2442,2670 \mathrm{ft}$, and it is noteworthy that this is the only first recersion copy which supples the accidental omission of eorum disciptina materia 'in the author's Latin account of the Cotif. Amontis at the end. As regards individual correctness it is rather unequal. In some places it has many mistakes, as vi. $150 g$ ff., whine in others it is very correct. The spelling is in most points like that of $F$, and it is usually good as regards tertnunations; but the scribe has some pecularities of his own, which he introduces more or less freely, as 'ho'for 'who, ' heo ' for 'sche' (pretty regularly, ' heor' for 'her,' 'whech ' for 'which,' It must also be an indindual fancy which leads him regulaty to substitute 'som tyme' for "whilom' wherever it oceurs. Punctuation tasually agrees with that of $F$.
M. Cama. Univ. Mm. 2.21 (Bern. Cat ii. 9648). Contains Corf. Amantis only, without 'Explicit,' \&c. (the last leaf being lost). Parchment, ff. $183,14 \times 9 \frac{1}{2} \mathrm{in}$. Qures of eight with catchwords and signatures: double columns of 46 lines: Latin summaries usually in margin, but occasomally in the text, as in A. Several hands, as follows, (1) ff. $1-32,41-64,73-88,97-136,145-152,161-176$; (2) ff. 33-40, 89-96, 137-144; (3) ff. 65-72 ; (4) ff. 153-160; (5) f. 177-183. Finally another, different from all the above, adds sometmes a marginal note which has been dropped, as on ff. $4,32 v^{\prime \prime}, 65,72 v^{\circ}$. The first hand, in which more than two-thirds of the book is written, is farly neat : the third much rougher than the rest, and also more maccurate.

Floreated half border in farrly good style at the begonning of each book, except the third, tifth, and seventh, and two rather rudely painted minatures, viz. f. $\mathrm{i}^{\mathrm{v}}$, Nebuchadnezzar's dream (the k.ng in bed, crowned), and f . 8 , the Confession, a curious little picture in the margin. The prost is laying his stole on the bead of the penitent, whose features are evidently meant for a portrant. It is quite different however from that which we have in A. Below this picture we find the note, ${ }^{4}$ Hic fat Garnimenfum.'

The last leaf is lost, containing no doubt the 'Explicit,' 'Quam cinxcre,' and 'Qua vnusquisque,' as in A

The nanles Stanhope and Yelverton are written on f. 39 (sixteenth cent.), and 'Margareta Straunge' on the Crrst leaf (seventeenth cent.). Later the book belonged to Bishop Moore of Norwich (No. 462 in his library), and it passed with the rest of his books to the University of Cambridge in 1715 , as a gift from the king, $M$ is very closely connected with $A$, as is shown by very many instances of special agreement, and some considerations suggest that it may be actually derived from it, as for example the writing of the Latin verses in the margin after f .80 , which in $A$ seems to be connected with a change of hand, whereas in $M$ it begins at the same point without any such reason. On the other hand $M$ has a good many readings which are clearly independent, either correcting mistakes and omissions in A, as Prol. 195 marg., 937, i. 673 marg., $924,1336,3445$, ii. 951 , iii. 2529, vi. 620 , or giving an early reading where A has a later, e.g. Prol. 869, i. 1118,1 755, ii. 961,3516 , iii. 1939, v. 3914, 5524, &c. In correctness of text and of spelling M is much inferior to A, especially as regards final e: for example, on f. 53 vo ,

Came neuer sit to mannes ere $\operatorname{Cam} A$
Tiding | ne to mannes sijt Tidinge . . . sihte $\mathbf{A}$

P1, formerly Phillipps 2298, bought in June, 1899, by Mr. B. Quaritch, who kindly allowed me to see it. Parchment, leaf measuring about $9 \times 6 \frac{1}{2} \mathrm{in}$., double column of 39 lines, in a fairly neat running hand, with many contractions because of the small size of the leaf. Latin summaries omitted. No decoration. Text agrees with AJM group, so far as I have examined it.

Ch. Chetham's Libr., Manchester, A. 6. 11 (Bern. Cat. ii. 715 1). Contains Conf. Amantis with 'Explicit' (4 lines) and 'Quam cinxere.' Parchment, ff. 126, about $15 \frac{1}{2} \times 10^{3} \mathrm{in}$., quires usually of 12 or 14 leaves. Rather irregularly written in double column of 47-61 lines, late fifteenth century. No ornament. Marginal Latin almost entirely omitted, but some English notes by way of summary occasionally in margin, perhaps by later hand.

The first leaf is lost, the MS. beginning Prol. 193, and also two leaves in the second quire (i. 1092-1491) and one in the tenth (viii. 2111 -2343); but besides these imperfections there are many omissions, apparently because the copyist got tired of his work, e.g. ii. 3155-3184, iii. 41-126, 817-842, 877-930, 1119-1196, iv. 17-72, 261-370, 569-704, 710-722, 915-968, 1117-1236, v. 72-112. There is also a good deal of omission and confusion in v.6101-7082. At the end in a scroll is written 'Notehurste,' which indicates probably that the book was copied for one of the Chethams of Nuthurst, perhaps Thomas Chetham, who died 1504. The word ' Notehurst' also occurs at the end of the Glasgow MS. of the ' Destruction of Troy,' which has in another place the names of John and Thomas Chetham of 'Notehurst' as the owners of it.

In text it belongs to the AJM group, and sometimes, as iv. 208, stands alone with J. There are many corruptions, however, and the spelling is late and bad.

N2. New College, OXford, 326. Contains Conf. Amantis only (no 'Explicit'). Parchment, ff. $207+4$ blanks, about $13 \frac{3}{4} \times 9 \frac{1}{2}$ in., in quires of 8 with catchwords; neatly written in double column of 40 lines (or 39). No Latin summaries or verses. The handwriting changes afterf. 62 (at iii. 2164) and becomes rather larger and more ornamental.

Two leaves lost after f. 35, containing ii. 1066-1377, and some of the leaves of the MS. from which it was copied had been displaced, so that iv. 2501-2684 comes after 2864, then follows 3049-3232, then 28653048, and after these 3233 ff . (two leaves displaced in the original). Lines omitted sometimes with blanks left, as i. 1044, 2527.

From the coats of arms which it contains the book would seem to have been written for Thomas Mompesson of Bathampton, sheriff of Wilts in 1478 (K. Meyer, John Gower's Besiehungen, &c.). It was given to John Mompesson by Sir Giles Mompesson in 1650, and to New College by Thomas Mompesson, Fellow, in 1705.

The text is a combination of two types. It has the Lancaster dedication at the beginning, but the conclusion which belongs to the first recension. On examination it proves that the scribe who wrote the first eight quires followed a manuscript not of the $F$, but of the $S \Delta$ class (agreeing for example with $S$ in $i$. 188 I f., 2017 fi., ii. 2387, iii. 168, 124 I , and differing from $F$ in regard to i .2267 ff ., 2343 ff ., \&c.), while the copyist of the remainder followed one of the revised first recension. The spelling is poor.

E2. Bibl. Egerton 913, Brit. Museum. A fragment, containing Conf. Amantis from the beginning to i. 1701. Paper, ff. $47,11 \frac{1}{2} \times 8$ in., in quires of 16 with catchwords : single column, 30-37 lines on page: Latin summaries in margin. Three hands, (1) f. 1-26, 31-36; (2) 27-30; (3) 37-47.

On f. $26 \mathrm{v}^{\circ}$. there is an omission of i. 387-570 (one leaf of 184 lines lost in the copy). This is supplied by the insertion of four leaves after f. 26, containing i. 375-580.

The text belongs to the revised group, as shown by Prol. 6, 7, 115,659 , 869, i. 162, 278, 368, 1262, &c.
(b) Intermediate.

H1. Harleian 3490, Brit. Museum. Contains, ff. 1-6 St Edmund's Speculum Religiosorum, ff. 8-215 Confessio Amantis, left unfinished on f. $215 \mathrm{v}^{0}$. Parchment, 215 leaves, $14 \frac{1}{2} \times 10$ in., in quires of 8 with catchwords : double column of 34-51 lines, small neat hand of middle fifteenth cent., with some corrections, perhaps in the same hand. Latin summaries in the text, underlined with red. Blank leaf cut out after f.6, and f. 7 left blank, so that Gower begins on the first leaf of the second quire. The text is left unfinished at viii. 3062*, part of the last page remaining blank.

Floreated pages at the beginning of the books and also at f. II, with various coats of arms painted.

The text given by this MS. is of an intermediate type. Occasionally throughout it is found in agreement with AJM &c. rather than with ERC &ec., as Prol. 6, 7, i. 16a, 630, 1755, 1768 I., 1934, &c., and in a large portion of the fifth book it passes over definitely in company with XG &c. to the revised class, but it does not contain the distinctive readings of XG. Sometimes it stands alone of the first recension in company with $F$ &cc., as iv. 2414, vii. 1749, viii. 2098, and especially in regard to the three passages, $i$. 2267 ff ., 2343 ff ., 2369 ff . In individual correctness of text and spelling the MS. does not rank high, and it is especially bad as regards insertion and omission of final e, as 'Wherof him ouht welle to drede,' 'Ayenste the poyntes of the beleue,' 'Of whome that he taketh eny hede.' It has th regulariy for $p$ and $y$ for 3 .
Y. In the possession of the Marquess of Bute, by whose kindness I have been allowed to examine it. Contains Confessio Amantis, imperfect at beginning and end. Parchment, $15 \frac{1}{2} \times 10 \frac{i}{i n}$., in quires of 8 with catchwords on scrolls. Very well written in double column of 50 lines, early fifteenth cent. Latin summaries in text (red). Floreated page finely illuminated at the beginning of each book, with good painting of large initials, some with figures of animals, in a style that looks earlier than the fifteenth cent. Spaces left on f. 2, apparently for two miniatures, before and after the Latin lines following i. 202.

Begins in the last Latin summary of the Prologue, 'Arion nuper citharista,' followed by Prol. 1053, 'Bot wolde god,' &c., having lost six leaves. Again, after iv. 819 nine leaves are lost, up to iv. 2490, and one leaf also which contained vi. 2367-vii. 88: the book ends with viii. 2799, two or three leaves being lost here. The book belonged to the first Marquess of Bute, who had his library at Luton. At present it is at St. John's Lodge, Regent's Park.

This is a good manuscript, carefully written and finely decorated. There are very few contractions, and in particular the termination oon is generally written in full, as 'confessioun,' i. 202, 'resoun,' iii. irix, ' devocioun,' 'contemplacioun,' v. 7125 f. &c., and th is written regularly for $p$. As regards individual accuracy and spelling it is very fair, but the scribe adds -e very freely at the end of words. The type of text represented is evidently intermediate to some extent, but I have not been able to examine it sufficiently to determine its exact character. It supports the revised group in a certain number of passages, e.g. i. 264, 630, 3374, 3396, 3416 , ii. 3 r, 1328, $1758, & c$., sometimes in company with $H_{1}$ and sometimes not. In particular we may note the passage i. 3374 ff ., where in some lines it is revised as above mentioned, and in others, as $3381,3414,3443$, it keeps the earlier text. Occasionally $Y$ scems to have a tendency to group itself with $B$, as i. 208, 604, and in other places we find YE or YEC forming a group in agreement with $B$, as i. 161, iii. 633, v. 1946, 3879.
X. Society of Antiquaries, 134. Contains, ff. 1-30 Lydgate's Life of the Virgin (imperfect at beginning), f. 1 begins in cap. xiii. 'Therefore quod pees,' ff. 30-249 Confessio Amantis with 'Explicit' (six lines), 'Quam cinxere,' and 'Quia vnusquisque,' ff. 250-283, Hoccleve's Regement of Princes, with 'Explicit Thomas Occlef,' ff. 283 vo, metrical version of Boethius [by John Walton of Osney] with leaves lost at the end, ends 'Amonges hem pat dwellen nyze present.' Parchment, ff. 297, about $15 \times 11$ in., in quires of 8 without catchwords, in a good and regular hand. The Conf. Amantis is in double column of 41 lines. Latin summaries in text (red). Ormamental borders at the beginning of books and space for miniature of Nebuchadnezzar's Dream on f. $34 \mathrm{v}^{\mathrm{j}}$. One leaf lost between ff. 134 and 135 , containing v. 1159-1318.
The book belonged formerly to the Rev. Charles Lyttelton, LL.D, who notes that it came originally from the Abbey of Hales Owen.
I owe thanks to the librarian of the Society of Antiquaries for courteously giving me access to the manuscript.

The text is of the intermediate type, passing over in a part of the fifth book with $\mathrm{H}_{1} \& \mathrm{c}$. to the revised group, but not giving the revised readings much support on other occasions. It forms however a distinct sub-group with GOAdz, these manuscripts having readings apparently peculiar to themselves in several passages, e.g. v. 3688 and after v. 6848.

The spelling is not very good, and in particular final e is thrown in very freely without justification : there are also many -is, -id, ir terminations, as 'servantis,' ' goodis,' ' nedis,' 'ellis,' ' crokid,' ' clepid,' ' vsid,' ' chambir,' ' aftir,' and 3 usually for $g h(h)$, as ' hy3e,' ' ny3e,' 'oust,' 'lawze,' 'sleystis,' &c. The text however is a fair one, and the use of it by Halliwell in his Dictionary preserved him from some of the errors of the printed editions. The scribe was apt to drop lines occasionally and insert them at the bottom of the column, and some, as iii. 2343, are dropped with sut being supplied.
G. Glasgow, Hunterian Museum, S. i. 7. Contains Confessio Amantis, imperfect at the end. Parchment, ff. 181 (numbered 179 by doubling 94 and 106) with two blanks at the beginning, $16 \frac{1}{2} \times 10^{3}$ in., in quires of 8 with catchwords: well and regularly written in double column of 46 lines, early fifteenth century. Latin summaries in the text (red). Floreated page at the beginning of each book, so far as they remain, and illuminated capitals. Many catchwords lost by cutting of the margin : it must once have been a very large book.

The manuscript has lost about sixteen leaves at the end, and eight altogether in various other places. In every case except one, however, the place of the lost leaf is supplied by a new leaf inserted, one of which has the missing portion of the text copied out from an early edition, while the rest are blank. The leaves lost are mostly such as would probably have had miniatures or illuminations, iacluding the beginning of the first, second, sixth, seventh, and eighth books. The losses are as follows: f. 4 (containing Prol. 504-657, probably with a miniature), text supplied by later hand, f. 7 (Prol. 984-i. 30), f. 9 (i. 199-336, probably with a miniature), f. 28 (i. 3402-ii. 108), f. 129 (131) (v. 7718-vi. 40), f. 143 (145) (vi. 2343-vii. 60), a leaf after f. 175 (177) (vii. 5399-viii. 126), f. 177 (179) (viii. 271-441), and all after f. 179 (181), that is from viii. 783 to the end.

A former owner (seventeenth cent.) says, 'This Book, as I was told by the Gent: who presented it to me, did originally belong to the Abbey of Bury in Suffolk.' If so, the Confessio Amantis was probably read in this copy by Lydgate.

I am under great obligations to Dr. Young, Librarian of the Hunterian Museum, for the trouble he has taken to give me access to this excellent manuscript.

The Glasgow MS. is especially related to $X$ (iv. 2773, $\nabla .1486,3582,3688$, $41 \mathrm{ro}, 6848 \mathrm{ff}$., vi. ror, vii. 769, \&c.), and belongs more generally to the group $H_{1} \mathrm{X}$ \&c., which passes over to the revised class almost completely in a considerable part of the fifth book. The text, however, is on the whole much better than that of $\mathbf{X}$, being both individually more correct and more frequently found on the side of the corrected readings, e.g. i. 2836 , ii. $144 \mathrm{I}, 1867$, v. $78 \mathrm{I}, 1203,2996,4425,5966,6839,7223,7630$, vi. 86, 746 (corrected), 1437, vii. 510, 1361, 1574, 2337, 3902, viii. 568. In at least one place, vii. 1574, it stands alone of the first recension, while in others, as V. $4425,5966,7630$, vi. $746,1437,8 c \mathrm{c}$., it is accompanied only by J. On the other hand in some passages, as v. 5802, 6019, 6257, vii. 1172 marg. \&c., $G$ has an earlier reading and $X$ the later, while there is also a whole series of passages where $G$, sometimes in company with $X$, seems to show a special connexion of some kind with B (BT), as ii. 1925, iii. 733, iv. 2295, 2508, v. 4, 536, 2508, 3964, 4072, 7048, vi. 1267, 1733 , vii. 3748, $4123,8 \mathrm{c}$.

The book is carefully written, and corrected in the same hand, e.g. v. $3^{145}, 5011$, vi. 430,746 , vii. 4233 . The spelling is pretty good, and in particular it is a contrast to $X$ in the matter of final $e$. This is seldom wrongly inserted, and when it is omitted it is usually in places where the metre is not affected by it. Punctuation often in the course of the line, but not at the end.
O. Stowe 950, Brit. Museum. Confessio Amantis, imperfect at beginning and end. Parchment, ff. 175 ( 177 by numbering leaves of another book pasted to binding), $14 \frac{1}{1} \times 10 \mathrm{in}$., in eights with catchwords and signatures, double column of 44-46 lines; written in a small, neat hand. Latin summaries in text (red). No decorated pages.

Has lost seven leaves of the first quire, to i. 165 (incl.), and aiso after f. i6 one leaf (i. 2641-2991), after f. 35 one (ii. 2486-2645), after f. 44 two (iii. 673-998), after f. 97 one (v. 3714-3898), after f. 108 two (v. 5832-6184), after f. 136 two (vii. 771-1111), and at least four leaves at the end (after viii. 2549).

Formerly belonged to Lord Ashburnham.
In text this belongs to the XG group, agreeing with them, for example, at v. 3688,6848 , and in general with $H_{1} X G$, where they go together íso far as I have examined the book), e.g. in the Latin verses after v. 2858 ('Vltra testes falsos,' ' penitus') and in the readings of $v .1893,1906,2694,3$ rio, &c.

The handwriting is somewhat like that of $\mathrm{H}_{1}$ : the spelling sometimes fairly good, but unequal; bad especially at the beginning. The metre generally good,

Ad. Additional 22139, Brit. Museum. Confessio Amantis, imperfect, with the author's account of his books, 'Quia vnusquisque,' at the end, followed by Chaucer's poems, 'To you my purse,' 'The firste stok,' 'Some time this worlde,' 'Fle fro the pres.' Parchment, ff. $138,13{ }^{9} \times 10 \frac{1}{i n}$., in quires of 8 with catchwords: regularly and closely written in double column of 53 lines by two hands, the first (ff. 1-71) somewhat pointed, the second rounder and smaller. Date 1432 on a shield, f. I. Latin summaries in text (red). Illuminated borders at beginning of books (except the eighth) and many gilt capitals : a miniature cut out on f. 4 (before Prol. 595).

The first leaves are much damaged, f. I having only two lines left (f. 2 begins Prol. 177), f. 3 has lost Prol. 455-478 and 505-527, &c., f. 4 has a miniature cut out, with Prol. 716-726 on the other side, f. 6 has lost Prol. 979-1061. After f. 7 there is a loss of seventeen leaves (i. 199-ii. 56), after f. 31 (originally 48) two quires (sixteen leaves) are lost and f. 32 is damaged (iii. 1150 -iv. 1517), after f. 8 I one leaf lost (v. 7807-vi. 154).

Bought by Brit. Museum from Thos. Kerslake of Bristol, 1857.
The text is closely connected with that of X , but not copied from that manuscript itself (see ii. 1711, vii. 92, viii. 2650). There are corrections here and there in a somewhat later hand, e. g. ii. 671, 1045, 1457, iii. 1052, iv. 2922, several of which are cases of lines supplied, which had been dropped. In v. 3688 the ordinary reading has been substituted doubtless for that of $\mathbf{X}$, and in some cases the alterations are wrong, as vii. 2639, viii. 51. The manuscript has a good many individual errors and the spelling is rather poor.

Cath. St. Catharine's Coll., Camb. Confessio Amantis with 'Explicit' (six lines), 'Quam cinxere' and 'Quia vnusquisque.' Parchinent, ff. $188,17_{4}^{8} \times 12 \frac{\mathrm{in} \text {., in quires of } 8 \text { with catchwords: }}{}$ well written in double column of 47 lines, afterwards 40 , before the middle of fifteenth cent. Latin summaries in text (red). Floreated whole border at the beginning of each book: miniature on $\mathrm{f} .4 \mathrm{v}^{\circ}$ of Nebuchadnezzar's Dream, and $£ .8 \mathrm{v}^{0}$ the Confession (Priest on stool to left of picture, laying hand but not stole on penitent's head), fairly well painted.
Leaves are missing which contained i. 3089-3276, ii. 3331-3518, v. 1182-1363, 6225-6388, vi. 107-460, vii. 984-1155, and viii. 2941$3114^{*}$, and the last leaf containing 'Explicit,' &c., is placed now at the beginning of the volume. There is a confusion of the text in the third book, iii. 236-329 being repeated after 678 and 679-766 left out, also a considerable omission in the fourth (iv. 2033-3148) without loss of leaves in this MS. (The statement in the MS. that seven leaves are here lost is a mistake.) In the passage vii. $1486-2678$ several leaves have been disarranged in the quire.

Given to the College in 1740 by Wm. Bohun of Beccles (Suffolk), to whose great-grandfather, Baxter Bohun, it was given in 1652 by his 'grandmother Lany.'
The text is of a rather irregular type, but often agrees with the XGO group. It has many mistakes and the spelling is poor.
Q. Belonged to the late Mr. B. Quaritch, who kindly allowed me to examine it slightly. Parchment, leaves measuring about $14 \times 8 \frac{8}{4} \mathrm{in}$., in double column of 49 lines, well written, early fifteenth cent. Ends with the account of the author's books, 'Quia vnusquisque.' Floreated pages at the beginning of books and a good miniature of the Confession on f. 3, of a rather unusual type-the priest seated to the left of the picture and the penitent at a little distance. Latin summaries in text (red). Begins with Prol. 342, having lost two leaves here, and has lost also Prol. 529-688, Prol. 842-i. 85, and perhaps more.

The book formerly belonged to a Marquess of Hastings.
This is a good manuscript, and the spelling is fairly correct. I place it provisionally here, because its readings seem to show a tendency towards the XG group.
(c) Unrevised.
E. Egerton 1991, Brit. Museum. Confessio Amantis with 'Explicit' (six lines), 'Quam cinxere,' and 'Quia vnusquisque,' after which 'Deo Gracias. And panne ho no more.' Parchment, ff.214, $15 \frac{1}{2} \times 10 \mathrm{in}$., in quires of 8 with catchwords: regularly written in a very good large hand in double column of 42 lines, early fifteenth cent. Latin summaries in text (red). Floreated pages at beginning of books, and a finely painted miniature of the Confession on f. $7 \mathrm{v}^{\circ}$.
Two leaves lost, originally ff. 1 and 3, containing Prol. 1-1 34 and 454-594. The book has also suffered from damp, and parts of the first and last leaves are so discoloured as to be illegible.

A seventeenth cent. note on f. i $\mathrm{v}^{0}$ tells us that the book was given on April 5, 1609, 'at Skarborough Castle' to the lady Eliz. Dymoke by her aunt the lady Catherine Burghe, daughter of Lord Clynton, who was afterwards earl of Lincoln and Lord High Admiral, to whom it came by her mother, the lady Eliz. Talboys. On f. 2 we find the register of the birth of Master Harry Clinton, son and heir of Lord Clinton, born at Canbery, June 6, 1542. The name Willoughby occurs also in the book (sixteenth cent.), and on a flyleaf inserted at the beginning we find 'John Brograve, 1682,' with Latin lines in the form of an acrostic about his family, signed 'Thomas Tragiscus, Bohemus.' Bought by the Brit. Mus. August 6, 1865, at Lord Charlemont's sale.

The text of this fine MS. belongs clearly to the unrevised group. At the same time its original must have had some corrections, and some also appear on the face of this MS. It stands alone of the first recension in agreement with $\mathrm{S}_{1} \mathrm{~F}$ in a few passages, 枵 v. 5438 , vi, 1954 , wi. 4318 marg ', and with $J$ in ij. 2576 , isi $176, v .4989$ f.1 7397 , vii. 3484 . It has also sume connextun wth B (BTA), standing in this matter ether w.th C (or YC, as t.1. 633 , v. $3688,3854,5667,6358$, or by itself, as Prol. 169, i. a122, i. 1353, iv. 340 1, v. $399^{2}, 6336$, vi. $323,97^{8,}$, vili, $1761,2706$.

The suribe seetns to have had a good ear for thetre, and seldom goes wrong in any point of spelling whict affects the verse, though apt to omt final $e$ in case of elision. Sometimes, however, he drops words, as 'swerd,' i. 433. 'so," V. 122, 'chaste,' v. 6277. On the whole the text of $E$ is probably the best of its class.
C. Corpis Christi Coll., Oxf. 67 (Bern, Cat. í 2.1534). Confessio Amantis mith 'Explicit' (four lines, 'Quan cinvere, and 'Quia vnusquisque,' afler which 'Dco Gracias.' Parchment, large folio, ff. 209 , of which three blank, in quires of 8 with catchwords: written in double column in a good hand of first quarter fifteenth cent. Latin summaries in text (red). Pages with complete borders at beginning of books (except Lib. i), and two very fair minatures, f. $4 \mathrm{v}^{0}$ Nebuchadnezzar's Image, f. $9 \mathrm{v}^{0}$ the Confession (priest laying stole on youthfu) penitent's head). The book has lost four leaves, the second of the first quire (Prol. 144-301), the last of the 22nd and first of the 23 rd (vit. 31373416 ), and the first of the 26th (vilu. 15fig-1727).

We find on the last leaf in a hand perhaps as early as the fifteenti cent. 'Liber partnet Thomam Crispe Ciuemet Mercerium Londinianm,' and on the flyleaf at the beginning a device containing the same name, and also A. Crispe, F. Crispe, W. Rawson, Anne Raw son. 'Augusten Crispe me Iure tenct ' is written on the first leaf of the text, and also 'Luber Wiltelmi Raw son A'. Dni 1580.' Finally, 'Liber C. C. C. Oxon. 1676 .' The device referted to above appears also in the decoration of the bock both at the beginning and the end, bat the manuscript must have been written much earlier than the time of Thomas Crispe.

Thes is a good copy of the unrevised group, having some connexion, as we lave seen above, with $E_{y}$ but less good in spellirg, espectaily as regards final . For spec al connexion with B, see i. 2234, iv. 359, &c. CL go specially together apparently in some places, as Prol. 937 f.n i. 94, 161, 165 , 433, ot 6 , but not throughout. There are some corrections by erasure of final $e_{+}$and a lume supplied by a different hand, vi $10 a 8$. Nu puactuation.
R. Reg. 18. C. xxii, Brit. Museum. Cenfessio Amantis with 'Exphest' istx lines), 'Quam cinxere ' and 'Quta wnusquisque.' Parchment, ff. 206,14 ? $\times 3_{1}^{1151,}$, in eights with catchwords: double column of 44 l. nes, well wratten, first quarter lifteentio cent. Latin in text (red). Floreated border of first page with monature of the Cenfession in the inillal $O$; also a minature on f. $4 \mathrm{vo}^{\circ}$ of the lmage of Nebuchadnezzar's dream (full with stone to left of pucture), and half borders at beginning of books, except Lib. j.

boke appertayneth vnto the Right Honorable the Ladic Margaret Strange' (presumably the same whose name appears in M). The binding has 'Lady Mary Strainge.'

A very fair MS. of its class and almost absolutely typical, but gives distinctively revised readings in a few passages, as ii. 925 , iv. 1342, v. 3145 , viii. 16ar. Omits vii. 2889-29r6 and some of the Latin summaries. The words 'pope' and 'papacie' are regularly erased, see especially f. 47. Spelling and metre fairly good : no punctuation.
L. Laud 609, Bodleian Library (Bern. Cat. 754). Confessio Amantis with 'Explicit' (four lines), 'Quam cinxere' and 'Quia vnusquisque.' Parchment, ff. $170,16 \times 104$ in., in quires of 8 with catchwords: double column, first of 40 lines, then about 44 , and after f. 16 of 51 : well written, first quarter fifteenth cent. Latin in the text (red). Floreated border of first page and half borders at the beginning of books, well executed. Two miniatures, on $\mathrm{f} .5 \mathrm{v}^{0}$ the Image of the dream, and on $f$. io the Confession, both much like those in $C$ and $B_{2}$, but damaged.

After f. 109 one leaf is lost (v. 5550-5739), one after f. 111 (v. 61406325), and eight (quire 16) after f. 118 (v. 7676-vi. 1373).

The names Symon and Thomas Elrington (sixteenth cent.) occur in the book, ff. 89, 170, and 'Liber Guilielmi Laud Archiepiscopi Cantuar. et Cancellarii Vniuersitatis Oxon. 1633' on f. i.
In correctness of text and spelling the text is decidedly inferior to the foregoing MSS. We may note apparently good readings in the following passages, Prol. 159, i. 3023, v. 107a, vii. 374, 3040, 3639, viii. 358, 483.

B2. Bodley 693, Bodleian Library (Bern. Cat. 2875). Confessio Amantis with 'Explicit' (six lines), 'Quam cinxere' and ' $Q u i a$ vnusquisque.' Parchment (gilt edged), ff. $196,15 \times 10$ in., in eights with catchwords. Well written, first quarter fifteenth cent., in double column of 46 lines. Latin in text (red). Floreated border of first page and half borders at beginning of books (also on f. $8 \mathrm{v}^{\circ}$ ), well executed: two small miniatures, f. $4 \mathrm{v}^{0}$ the Image of the dream, f. $8 \mathrm{v}^{\circ}$ (within an initial T) the Confession, like those in C and L, but smaller.
At the end we have 'ffrauncois Halle $\mathrm{A}^{\circ} \mathrm{Mv}^{\mathrm{o} V I}$ ' (i.e. 1506), 'Garde le ffine.' In the initial on f. i a coat of arms is painted surrounded by the Garter and its motto. The arms are those of Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk (Brandon with quartering of Bruyn and Rokeley, see Doyle, Official Baronage, iii. 443), and on the same page is painted the Brandon crest (lion's head erased, crowned per pale gules and arg., langued az.). These must have been painted in later than the date of the MS. The binding is deeply stamped with the arms of Great Britain and Ireland in colours, and the letters I. R., showing that the book belonged to James I. It was presented to the Bodleian by Dr. John King, who was Dean of Ch. Ch. 1605-161\%. We must suppose that James gave it to Dr. King.

The fineness of the vellum and the general style of the book seems to indicate that it was written for some distinguighed person. The text is very typical of its class. In correctness and spelling it is less good than $L$, ofener dropping final $e$ and having less regard for the metre.

Sn. Arch. Sel.d. B. 11, Bodletan Library (Bern. Cat. 3357. Con/essio Amantis with ' Explicit' (four lnes), 'Quan cmxere' and 'Quia vnusquisque.' P. per (with some leaves of parchment), ff. $169,14 \frac{1}{3} \times 10^{7}$ th. Quires with varying number of leaves, usually 12 or 16 , signatures and catchwords. (No written leaves lost, but blanks cut away in quires nine and ten.) Written in double column of $44 \sigma_{j}$ lines (no ruling), in a small hand, middle fifteenth cent. Latin in text. Red and blue inutials, but no other decoration.

The book has the name 'Edwarde Smythe' (sixteenth cent.) as the owner. It came into the Bodleian among John Selden's books.

The text is a poor one with a good many corruptions, from the first line of the Prologue ('To hem' for 'Of hem') onwards, many of them absurd, as 'who thoghte' for ' wo the whule' ( $\mathbf{~}, 675$ ?, ' homicides ' for 'boundes' (vil. 5256 , and some arising from confusion between $\beta$. $i$, and $y$. Thus the seribe (who usually has th for $\beta$ and $y$ for $j$ ) Ls capable of writing 'aben " or 'athen ' for 'gzein,' 'yer of' for 'per of,' 'yeff' for "pef,' 'bibete ' for 'byete." There are many mistakes in the coloured intals, e g. it .3501 , m , 2033, 2439. Some northern forms, 迢 ' gude,' jui, ro73, 'Qwbat," II. a439. Nate agreement with B its some places, as i. 365, 1479, ii. 1292, \%. 247, 6296 , and a lew more.
D. Camb. Univ. Dd. viii. 19 (Bern. Cat. ii. 9653). Confessio Amantss (Imperfect). Parchment, ff. $\mathbf{1 2 7}$, quires of 8 with catchwords: doubie column of 48 (sometimes 50) lines, regularly written in a hand using very thick strokes. Latin in text (red). Spaces left for miniatures, f. $4 \mathrm{v}^{\prime}$, f. $8 \mathrm{v}^{\circ}$ (the latter marked 'hic Imago'), and perhaps also f. I. Many spaces left for illuminated capitals.

After $f .83$ follows a quire of six with $5 v^{0}$ blank (after end of Lib. iv.) and 6 lost: then a quire of eight with 5 and 6 (also part of 4) blank, and 7,8 lost: then, f.94, 'Incipit liber Sextus.' So that of Lib, $v$, we have only about four leaves ( $v, 1444-2149$ ). The leaves numbered $16,17,15$ should stand last (in that order), and the text ends (on f. 15) with vii. 3683 , the line unfinished and the rest of the page blank.

Successive owners in sixteenth cent., Magister Asshe, Thom Carson for Cursson), Ambr. Belson, J. Barton. It was one of Bishop Moore's lyooks (No. 467), and came to the University in 1715.
The text shows no leaning, so far as 1 know, to the revised sroup. Perhaps somewhat akin to the MSS, which precede and follow: see Prol. 33 t mang , i. 110, 370.

Ar. Arundel 45, College of Arms (Bern. Cat. ii. 5547). Confessio Amantis (imperfect). Paper, 168 leaves (numbered 167, but one dropped in numbering after f. 42) + two parchment blank at beginning, $11 \frac{1}{8} \times 8 \ddagger$ in. Quires of 8 (usually), with catchwords, double column of 46-51 lines, small neat writing, middle fifteenth cent. Latin in text (red) : no illumination, but spaces left for initials.
One leaf lost after f. 7 (i. 63-216), two after f. 116 (v. 5229-5594), and all after viii. 1102 (about twelve leaves gone at the end).
Former possessors, ' Thomas Goodenston, Gerdeler of London,' and (before him probably) 'Jhon Barthylmewe, Gerdyllarr and Marchant.'
Hd. At Castle Howard, the property of the Earl of Carlisle, who most kindly sent it for my use. Confessio Amantis with 'Explicit' (four lines), 'Quam cinxere' and ' $Q u i a$ vnusquisque.' Parchment, ff. 111 (numbered as 110 ) $14 \times 11$ in., in quires of 8 (usually), marked iiii, $\mathbf{v}$, vi, \&c. In double column of $60-74$ lines, rather irregularly written in a small, fairly clear hand, later fifteenth cent. Latin in text. Some red and blue initials; no other decoration.

Seventeen leaves lost at the beginning, f. i begins at i. 3305, and f. 8 is the first leaf of quire iiii : after f. 73 four leaves lost, containing vi. 264-1 306 , and in the last quire one, containing viii. 2566-2833. The leaves in the latter half of the book, from f. 66, have been much disarranged in the binding.
The name 'Tho. Martin' is written at the beginning, in the handwriting of the well-known Thomas Martin of Palgrave. This of course is not the book mentioned in Bern. Cat. ii. 61I as among the books collected by Lord William Howard at Naworth Castle. There seems to be at present no Gower MS. at Naworth.
Some readings seem to show a connexion of Hd with L, as iii. 1885, 2763, ' Now herkne and I pe po,' iv. 1341, $3086,3449,3535$, but it is not derived from it. Note also the readings of ii. 1577 ' Ne ,' 2825 ' by,' iii. 1173 'Iupartie,' v . 3306 'Oute.' There are many corruptions in the text as well as some deliberate alterations, as 'cleped' regularly to 'called,' and words are often dropped or inserted to the injury of the metre.

Ash. Ashmole 35, Bodleian Library (Bern. Cat. 6916). Confessio Amantis (imperfect). Paper, ff. 182, $13 \frac{1}{2} \times 9 \frac{2}{2}$ in. Quires of 12 (usually), with catchwords, double column of 42-48 lines, fairly well written : no Latin verses or summaries, but summaries in English written in the text (red), mostly omitted in the last thirty leaves. Some initials in red, spaces left for larger capitals.
Begins with Prol. 170, having lost two leaves (one blank) at the beginning. After f. 2 one leaf is lost (Prol. 541-725), one after f. 4 (i. 1-169), one after f. 32 (ii. 1749-1927), one after f. 91 (v. 2199-2366), three after f. 181 (viii. 2505-2893), one after f. 182, which ends with viii. $3082^{*}$. Half of f .182 is torn away, but the beginning of the Chaucer verses remain, as well as a whole column of the early form of concluson, in sjuite of the statement in the Ashmole Catalogue. Even if the conclusion were really wanting, there would be no difficulty in assigning the MS, to its proper class.

SECOND Recension.

(a) S. The Stafford MS, now the possession of the Earl of Ellesmere, by whose kind permission I have been allowed to make use of it. Contains Confessio Amants with 'Explocit' (stx lines) and 'Quam cinxere.' Parchment, ff. 172 (the last three blank), $14 \times 9{ }^{\text {b }} \mathrm{m}$, quires of 8 with catchwords and signatures ( 24 in all, the last of five leaves): written in double column of 46 lines in a good square hand of late fourteenth century type. Latin summaries in the margin. The first page has a wellexecuted border of geometrical pattern and a rather rudely painted miniature of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, in style resembling that of $F$. This page bas aiso three heraldxc shuelds and a crest, of which more hereafter, $f$ loreated half borders at the beginning of books and illuminated capitals throughout, well exeruted and with an unusual amount of gnid. On f. 56 a well panted grotesque figure of a man with legs and tatl of some animal, wearing a pointed headpiece and armed with an axe. This is part of the insual decoration of Lib, iv,

The bonh has unfortunately lost in alt seventeen leaves, as follows: one after f. I (Prol, 147 320), one after f. 7 (Prol. 1055 i. 106 , three after f. 46 uii. 573-1112), one after f. 68 (iv. 2351-2530), two after f. 69 (iv. 2711-3078), one after f. 70 (iv. 3262 3442), two after f. 71 (iv. 3627v. 274), one after f. 107 (v. 6821 7000), one after f. 125 (vi. 2357 vil. 88), two after f. 139 (vii. 2641-3004), two after f. 153 (vil. 5417 -vini. 336). In aduation to this, one leaf, f. 50 (iii. $1605-1848$ ), is wrutten in a different and probably rather later hand, and seems to have been inserted to supply the place of a leaf lost in quite early times.

The question about the former owners of this fine manuscript is an interesting one. As to the devices on the first page, the first shield (withan the initial $O$ ) is sable and gules per pale, a swan argent, the second in the lower margin) sable, three ostrich feathers (argent?) set in three scrolls or, whie in the right margin there is a crest of a loon, collared win label of three points, standing on a chapeau, and below is suspended a shield quartered az. and gules, with no device. The crest is evidently meant for that of John of Gaunt, though it is not quite correct, and the three ostrich feathers (properly ermine) were used by him as a recognisance (sce Sandford's cienealogzal /fist. p. 249), while the swan is the well-known badge of Henry his son, to be seen suspended from Gower's own collar of SS on his tomb and in the miniature of the Farfax MS. It seems proballie then that the book was prepared for presentdion to a member of the house of Lancaster, probably ether John of Gaunt or Henry. If it be the fuet that the swan badge was not adopted by Henry until 1397, this would not be the actual copy sent on the occasion of the dedication to him in 1392-93. On the other hand the absence of all royal emblems indicates that the book was prepared before Henry's accession to the throne.

In the sixteenth cent. (Queen Elizabeth's reign) the book belonged to one William Downes, whose name is written more than once on f. 170. The ornamental letters W. D. on f. 21 are probably his initials, and on f .76 we have Phillipp Downes in a fifteenth-cent. hand. On f. $171 \mathrm{v}^{\circ}$ there is a note about 'the parsonages of G wend . . . and Stythians in the county of Cornewell, percell of the possessions of the late monastary of Rewley,' and also about the 'personage of Croppreadin in the county of Oxforde,' granted for xxi years by Edward VI and paying lvi pounds a year. 'T. P. Goodwyn' is another name (seventeenth cent.). When Todd saw the MS. at the beginning of this century, it belonged to the Marquess of Stafford.

S has the Lancaster dedication and the rewritten epilogue, and with these the three additional passages, v. $6395^{}-643^{8^{}}, 7086^{-} 7210^{}$, vii. $3207^{*}-33^{60 }$, omitting v. 770I-7746, and transposing vi. 665-964. In correctness it is inferior only to $F$, and these two stand far above all others as primary authorities. Their independence of one another is certain, and the general agreement of their text gives it the highest guarantec of authenticity. The spelling is practically the same, as will be seen in those passages which are printed from $S$ in this edition, e. g. vii. $3207^{}-33^{6} 0^{*}$, indeed in most places the two texts are absolutely the same, letter for letter. As regards f . 59 , which is in a different hand, it should be noted not only that it is far less correct than the rest, but also that it is copied from a different original, a MS. of the unrevised first recension, distinctive readings of which are given in iii. 1686, 1763,1800 , 1806, while no trace of such readings appears in any other part of $S$.
a. Sidney Sussex Coll., Camb. $\Delta .4$. 1 (Bern. Cat. i. 3. 726). Contains Confessio Amantis, with 'Explicit' (six lines) and 'Quam cinxere,' (ff. 2-202 vo ${ }^{0}$, and then an English version of Cato's Disticha. Paper, ff. 211 (of which four blank), $11 \frac{1}{2} \times 8 \frac{1}{2} \mathrm{in}$., in quires of 12 with catchwords and signatures. Written in double column of 41-48 lines in a fairly good hand, middle fifteenth century, with a good many contractions. Latin summaries usually in text, sometimes in margin. No decoration. The first leaf is lost, containing Prol. 1-140.

The book was left to the College by Samuel Ward, Master, 1643. One of the blank leaves has the word 'temsdytton' (i.e. Thames Dytton) in an early hand.

In regard to form of text this MS. agrees throughout with S, and it must no doubt have had the Lancaster preface. It is remarkable as containing the additional lines printed by Caxton at the end of the Prologue (which may have been also in $S$ ), and it has eleven Latin hexameters substituted for the prose summaries at Prol. 591 and 617 , beginning,

[^24]and agan four after the Latin prose at vin. 28gi, beginning,
'Sede sedens ista judex indlexibulis sta,'
The text has many corruptıons and the spelling is not very good. A does not give the first recension readings on f. 50 of S , wh.ch of itself is sufficent proof that it is not derved from that manuscript, for the insertion of this leaf must be much earlier than the date of $\Delta$.
(b) Ad. Audithonal 12043, Brilush Museum. Comfessto Amantis, imperfect at beginning and end. Parchment, ff. 156 (the last blank), $13 \times 9 \frac{1}{4} \mathrm{in}$., in quires of 8 with catchwords: well wrsten in double column of 45 -50 lines, beginning of fifteenth century, Latin summaries in the margin up to f. 16 (II. 382), after which they are omitted Floreated pages in good style at the beginning of each book.

More than twenty leaves are lost, viz. ten at the beginnmg, up to and including i. 786 , one after f. 45 (iv. 1-190), two after f. 47 (Iv. $559-$ 932), two after f. 86 (v. 4605-4983), one after f. I 31 (wi. $30713269^{*}$ ), one after f. 151 (vin. (440-1632), and live or mure at the end, after vil. 2403. There is also omatted without loss of leaf uit. 1665 1848, no doubt owing to loss of leaf in the copy : see below.
'Elizabeth Vernon' (fifteenth century?) on blank leaf at the end. The book belonged in the present century to Bp. Butler of Lichfield.

This MS. heads the group AdBTA, being nearer to the fully revised type than any of the rest, and showng only very occasionat traces of the earlier readings (but ill 254. 941, v. 6418, vil. 3298, vin. 856. 1076, \& C ). It agrees with the rest, as against $S \Delta, 1 \pi$ giving $v, 7015^{}-7034^{}$, vil. $2329^{}-2340^{}$, and $3149^{*}-33^{80^{0}}$, but does not seems fully to forn the group until the latter part of the fifth book. In connexion with this we may note the curious fact that the omitted passage, il. $1665-1848$, 15 precisely that contaned in f. 50 of S, whach apparently was suppled in place of a lost leaf. In correctesss and speilung the MS. is very faur, but not goed in regard to final e. Punctua Hon often where there is a pause in the line.
T. Trin. Collu, Camb. R. iii. 2 (Bern. Cat. i. 3. 335). Contains, ff. t-147, Confessio A muntss, imperfect at the beginnmeg, uith 'Explicit' (six lines) and 'Quarn cinxere,' ff. 148-152 vo the French Truitie, with the Latin pieces 'Quis sit vel ģualıs,' 'Est amor in glosa,' and 'Lex docet,' f. 152 'Quia vnusquisque,' f. $152 \mathrm{v}^{\prime \prime}=154 \mathrm{v}^{0}$ the Latin Carmess super mulliphai aritorum pestilemia, ending with the ten lines "Hoc ego bis deno.' I'archment, ff. $154,14 \times 10$ th., quires of 8 with catchwords, double column of 46 lines, Latin summaries in margin, but in some parts omitted. Well written in several hands, early fifteenth century, of which the first wrote ff. $18,50-57,748 \mathrm{II}_{3} \mathrm{~B}_{4}$ vo-89, $9^{8-1131^{1}}$, the second $\mathbb{f f} .9-32$, the third ff. $3342,58.65,82,83,84 \mathrm{~T}$ : 90-97, the fourth ff. 66-73, 113-154. No decoration except caloured or g.lt caputals.

The book has lost five whole quires at the beginning, and beg'ns at present with ii. 2687. Also the second col. of $\mathrm{f} .84 \mathrm{r}^{\circ}$ is left blank with omission of $v .7499-7544$. A large part of f. 33 is blank, but there is no omission.

Presented to the College by Thomas Nevile, Master.
A good MS., with form of text in $v$, vi, vii, like that of AdB, and obviously having a special connexion in its readings with $B$. $T$, however, is of a more fully corrected type than B, and it must remain doubtful whether the preface of the poem in T was of the earlier or the later form. In any case the original of the two, if (as it seems) they had a common original, was not made up earlier than 1397, for the resemblance of the manuscripts extends to the French and Latin poems which follow the Conf. Amantis, and the last of these is dated the 20th year of king Richard.

The third and fourth hands are neater and better than the other two. The first is rather less correct and less good in spelling than the others, and also it omits the Latin marginal notes. The parts written in this hand are ii. 2687-iii. 608, v. 1415-2874, 5805-7082, v. 7545-vi. 1040, vi. 2201-vii. 2532.

With regard to the connexions within the group AdBTA, attention may be drawn especially to v. 659, where Ad has the usual reading, $T$ omits the line, leaving a blank, while $B$ and $\Lambda$ have bad lines made up for the occasion, to $\nabla .4000$, where Ad again has the usual text, T $\Lambda$ omit, and $B$ has a madeup line, and to v. 7303, where AdBT omit two lines necessary to the sense which 1 inserts. We may note the alteration by erasure in T of $\mathbf{V}$. 5936, apparently from the reading of the unrevised text.
B. Bodley 294, Bodleian Library (Bern. Cat. 2449). Contents, as in T, ff. 1-197 Conf. Amantis, \&c., ff. 197-199 vo Traitie, f. $199 \mathbf{v}^{0}$ ' Quia vnusquisque,' ff. 199 vo-201 Carmen super multiplici, \&c., ending with the lines ' Hoc ego bis deno.' Parchment, ff. 201, $15 \frac{1}{2} \times 10 \frac{3}{4} \mathrm{in}$., quires of 8 with catchwords. Well written in double column of 42-47 lines, first quarter of fifteenth cent. Latin summaries in text (red): ' Confessor,' ' Amans,' usually omitted. Complete border of first page and at the beginning of each book except $i$ and $i i$, painted in good style. Two miniatures, f. $4 \mathrm{v}^{\mathrm{o}}$ Nebuchadnezzar's dream (the king in bed crowned), f. 9 the Confession, nearly as in E. No leaves lost.

The name 'Edwarde Fletewoode' appears on f. 1, and the book was probably given by him to the University in 1601 .

Form of text in $v$, vi, vii the same as AdT. We have in this MS. a combination of the early preface with the rewritten conclusion, a form which we might reasonably expect to find, and which may have been that of $T$, as it certainly was of the MS. used by Berthelette. Something has already been said of the text of this MS., and for the rest sufficient information will be found in the critical apparatus. The spelling of $B$ is exemplified in the passages printed from it, Prol. 24*-92*, v. 7015*-7036*, vii. 2329*-2340*, $3^{149 *}-\mathbf{3}^{180 *}$. As in the case of E , the copyist is careful of metre, and while omitting final e freely before a vowel, rarely does so where it affects the metre, and seldom adds $-e$ unduly. There is hardly any punctuation.
a. Wollaton Hall, in the possession of Lord Middleton, who kindly allowed me to examine it. Contents as B. Parchment, ff. 197, $15 \frac{1}{4} \times 1{ }^{\frac{1}{2}}$ in., in quires of 8 with catchwords and signatures. Well and regularly written in double column of 46 lines, early fifteenth century. Latin summaries in text (red) as a rule, sometimes in margin. Spaces left for miniatures at the beginning and for initials throughout, not painted. No leaves lost.

The text of this MS. is in many ways interesting. It has Lancaster dedication, but in text it often seems to belong to the unrevised first recension; for though many of the errors of this group are found to be corrected in $\Lambda$, even in cases where B retains them, as Prol. 7, 219, Lat. Verses after 584, $8 \mathrm{r} 2,844,937$ f., i. 8, 54, 264, 278, \&c., ii. 671, 833, \&c., and though there are also many of the revised readings, as i. 368, ii. 1758 ff. (in both of which $B$ is unrevised), iv. $517,766,985 \mathrm{f}$., 2954, ${ }^{15} 53$, v. 30,47 f., 82,2694 f., 3110 , \&c., yet in many other places the original readings stand in $\Lambda$, as $i$. 3374 ff ., iv. 2407, 2556, v. 274, 316, 394, 1893, 1906 f., \&c., where BT are revised. The characteristic second recension readings are almost regularly given by $\Lambda$, which agrees with $\operatorname{AdBT}$ against $\mathrm{S} \Delta$ in regard to the passages inserted; but there are some important differences between this MS. and all others of its class, viz. (I) after v. 6430* it has a combination of first and second recensions. (a) v. $7701-7746$ is inserted as in the first and third recensions. (3) viii. 2941-2959 is inserted as in the first recension (with the curious corruption 'Cuther' for 'Chaucer'), the rewritten epilogue being carried on from the line ' Enclosed in a sterred skye.'

It will be observed that BTA often form a distinct group, as (to take only a few examples) iv. 1567, 1996, 2034, 3132, 3138 , v. 654 ff., 4138, \&c. We may note, however, v. 7303 f. which are inserted by $\Lambda$, though omitted in AdBT, and the reading 'she' in iv. 2973.

P2. Phillipps 8192, at Thirlestaine House, Cheltenham. Same contents as BTA. Parchment, ff. 193, large fol. Well written in double col. of 46 lines, early fifteenth cent. Latin summaries in margin. lllumination on the first page and at the beginning of books, except i. and iii. On the first page a miniature of Nebuchadnezzar's Image, with a small figure in the border, and also a figure painted in the initial O. Two leaves missing and supplied in blank after f. I (Prol. 154-509), and one later (vii. 3199-3382). On f. 1 vo 'Joh: Finch Comitis Winchilsea filius 1700.'

A fine MS. of an early type. It has the Lancaster dedication in the Prologue and the later form of epilogue, and as regards the additional passages it agrees with AdBTA. In text $P_{2}$ is closely related to $\Lambda$, but it does not include v. 7701-7746 or viii. 2941-2960, nor does it agree with $\Lambda$ in v. 6431* ff. As instances of their agreement we may cite Prol. 14, 'It dwelleth oft in,' 115, 'vneuened,' 127, 'ben nought diuided,' \&cc. In the marginal note of Prol. 22 Ps has 'sextodecimo,' but the first three letters are over an erasure.

Third Recension.

F. Fairfax 3, Bodleian Library (Bern. Cat. 3883). Contains, ff. 2-186, Confessio Amantis, with 'Explicit' and 'Quam cinxere,' ff. $186 v^{\circ}-190 v^{\circ}$ Traitie, \&c., ff. $190 v^{0}-194$ Carmen de multiplici viciorum pestilencia, ending with the lines 'Hoc ego bis deno,' \&c., f. 194 'Quia vnusquisque,' f. $194 \mathrm{v}^{\text {o }}$ sixteen Latin lines by 'a certain philosopher' in praise of the author, beginning ' Eneidos Bucolis que Georgica,' f. 195 a leaf of a Latin moral treatise from the old binding. Parchment, ff. 195 (including one blank flyleaf at the beginning and one of another book at the end), $13 \frac{1}{2} \times 97 \mathrm{in}$., in quires of 8 with catchwords; the first quire begins at f. 2, the twenty-fourth quire has six leaves and the twenty-fifth (last) three. The leaves of the seventh quire are disarranged and should be read in the following order, 50 , 52,53,51,56,54,55,57. The Confessio Amantis is written in double column of 46 lines, in a very good hand of the end of the fourteenth cent. Latin summaries in the margin. Half borders, some with animal figures, at the beginning of each book, and two miniatures, one at the beginning, rather large, of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, and the other on f. 8 of the Confession, in which the priest is dressed in green and has a wreath of roses on his head, while the penitent, whose features are damaged, wears a hood and a collar of SS with a badge, probably a swan, dependent from it. This was no doubt intended as a portrait of the author: the collar and badge have somewhat the appearance of having been added after the original painting was made. The size of the illuminated capitals indicates precisely the nature of the various divisions of the work.
On f. 2 is written 'The Ladie Isabell Fairfax daughter and hare of Thwats hir bouk,' on f. 8 'This boke belongeth to my lady farfax off Steton,' and on f. I ' $\mathrm{S}^{r}$ Thomas fayrfax of Denton Knighte true owner of this booke, 1588. . This Lady Isabell Fairfax was the granddaughter and heiress of John Thwaites of Denton, who died in 1511 , and was married to Sir William Fairfax of Steeton. Sir Thomas Fairfax of Denton, whose name appears in the book, was her grandson. The book no doubt came from the Thwaites family, and we are thus able to trace it back as far as John Thwaites of Denton, who died in old age not much more than a hundred years after the death of the author. It was bequeathed with other MSS. to the University of Oxford by Sir Thomas Fairfax the parliamentary general, grandson of the above Sir Thomas Fairfax of Denton, and was placed in the Bodleian Library in 1675.
The first leaf of the text, up to Prol. 146, is written in a second hand which has also written f. 186-194, including the last lines of the Conf. Amantis from viii. ${ }^{\text {1447. }}$. A third hand (with very different orthography) has written viii. 2938-3146, being the last 29 lines of $f .41 \mathrm{v}^{\circ}$ (over an erasure) and the whole of $f .185$, which is a leaf inserted in the place of one cut away (the last of quire a3). At vis. 2938 there is visible a note, "now haue, etc, for the guidance of the scribe after the erasure had been made. From the fact that two hands have been employed in the transformation of the MS. at the beginning and end it seems probable that the changes were made at two separate tumes as we also know by the datea that the rewritten eplogue preceded the rewritten preface), and that what I have called the third hand was really the second in order of tame, being employed to substitute the later epilogue for the former, while the other hand, dong its work probably after the accession of Henry IV, replaced the first leaf by one contanang the Lancaster dedication, whelh had been in existence sime 1392 3, but perhaps only in provate circulation, and added also the Tratre and the Latin poents, with the account of the author's books, 'Qua vnusqtosque," in its revised form. I ssy after the accesston of Henry IV, because the refcrence in the third recension account of the books to Richard's fall, ${ }^{4}$ ab alto corruens in f,ueam quam fecit faniter protectus est; seems to require as late a date as this, It should be noted that thas hand is the same as that which has made somewhat similar additions to the Atl Souls and Glasgow MSS. of the Vox Clamaufs. Other examples of alteration of first recension readings by etasure in Fare Prol, 331 margon $336,1.2713$ f, w, 1321 f., 1361 f., Lat, Verses after vil. 1640, Laf. Verses a ter vii. 1984.

As thus edution prints the text of the Farfax MS. and its relations have already been discussed, little more need be said here except as to the manner in which the text is dealt with in the printing. It shouid be noted then that and $f, 4$ and $v$ are used in accordance with modern practice, that no distinction is made between the two forms of $s$, that th is used for $\beta$, and for no good M5 has It:. It should be chserved also that the Farlax scribe frequently uses $v$ for $\boldsymbol{m}$ at the end of 2 word, as 'nov,' 'hov' (ofen 'hou "i ' bov' (usual,y ' \}ou '), 'zov' also ' you '), 'auov,' ' wondov,' 'blev, ' knev,' $\& \mathrm{c}$, and sometimes in other positrons, either for the sake of distimetion from " or merely for ornament, as "comvne,' 'retenve," 'runne," 'purgh," havk," ' comune, ' runne, ' jurgh,' "hauk,' ' Coul,' \&ec. In all these cases vis given in the text as $m$. The termanation ' $-n^{\prime}$ ' is regularly printed as 'oun, French words with this ending appear in F wath -ols or on, usually the latter (but 'resoun' in full, Frol 15 s), and sometimes we have 'ton' iur 'toun,' as vil 53³, vui. 3523 Sa also 'stuthfe : wounde,' i. 1425 Y , "gronde" for "grounde," I. 2051, 'exponde : founde," i, 2967f + 'branche :
 2369. 'sklandre,' v. 5536 ('sclaundre,' 712 , 'comande : launde,' vili. 2159.

The contracton $y$ as a separate word is in this edstion almost regularly givell as "per." It is hardly ever written fully in F , bat we have + Per aunter,' v. 345t, 'Per channce, 'v. $7^{\text {Bi6, and J regularly gives 'per chance,' }}$ 'per cas,' \&c., wathout contraction. Other MSS, as A and B, incl pe rather to "par.' Fhas 'perceive," "aperccive,' but 'partit."

With regard to the use of capitals, this edition in the ma n follows the MS. Some tetters, however, as #v, $u, y$, can haraly be said to have my dilference of form, and others are uscd rather rarely is capitals, whale in the case of some, and espetally s, the capitat form is ta ed with execssute freedom. It has seemed desirable therefore to introduce a greater degree of consistency, while preserving the general usage of the MS. Proper names are regularly given in this edition with capitals (usually so in the MS., but not always), and sentences are begun with capital letters after a full stop. On the other hand the $I$ (or $J$ ), which is often used as an initial, has frequently been suppressed, and occasionally this has been done in the case of other letters. It may be observed, however, that capital letters are on the whole used very systematically in the MS., and other good MSS., especially S, agree with $F$ in the main principles. Certain substantives as 'Ere,' ' Erthe,' 'Schip,' ' Sone,' ' Ston,' are almost invariably used with capitals, and names of animals, as 'Cat,' 'Hare,' 'Hound,' ' Leoun,' ' Mous,' ' Oxe,' ' Pie,' ' Ro,' 'Schep,' ' Tigre,' of some parts of the body, as 'Arm,' 'Hiele,' 'Lippes,' 'Nase,' ' Pappes,' 'Skulle,' and many other concrete substantives, are apt to be written with capitals, sometimes apparently in order to give them more importance. Capitals are seldom thus used except in the case of substantives and some numerals, as ' Nyne,' 'Seconde,' 'Sexte,' 'Tenthe,' and in many cases it is pretty evident that a distinction is intended, e.g. between 'Sone' and 'sone' (adv.), 'Se' ( $=$ sea) and 'se' (verb), 'Dore' and 'dore' (verb), see iv. 2825 f., 'More' and 'more,' 'Pype' and 'pipe' (verb), iv. 3342 f., ' Myn' and 'myn' (poss. pron.), 'Mone' and 'mone' (verb), but see v. 5804, 5808, ' In' and 'in,' vii. 4921 f., viii. 1169 f., 1285 f. That some importance was attached to the matter is shown by the cases where careful alterations of small letters into capitals have been made in the MS., as Prol. 949, i. 1687, v. 1435, 3206, 4019 , vii. 2785, &c.

Many corrections were made by the first hand, and some of these are noteworthy, especially the cases where a final e seems to be deliberately erased for the sake of the metre or before a vowel, as i. 60 ' get' for 'gete,' iii. 2346 'trew' for 'trewe,' vi. 1359 ' I red' for 'I rede,' vii. 1706 ' ffyf' for ' ffyue,' or where an e has been added afterwards, as ii. 3399 ' depe,' iii. 449 'bowe,' v. 1269, 3726, 5265, 'whiche.'

It remains only to speak of the punctuation of the MS., which is evidently carried out carefully. The frequent stops at the ends of lines are for the most part meaningless, but those elsewhere are of importance and usually may be taken as a guide to the sense. They are sometimes certainly wrong (e.g. i. 1102 Togedre. 1284 will. 2965 fro. ii. 1104 wille. 1397 name. 2354 astat. iii. 2638 be. iv. 497 grace. 175 I besinesse. 1985 hardi. 2502 alle. 3354 Slep. 3635 lif. v. 4 good. 231 herte. 444 wynd. 1342 See . 1630 only $\cdot 2318$ bord . \&c), but the proportion of error is small, and the punctuation of $F$ generally must be treated with respect. There is usually a stop wherever a marked pause comes in the line, and this punctuation occurs on an average about once in ten lines. The following record of the punctuation of iv. 1301-1600 will serve as an illustration of its nature and extent : 1303 loue. 1307 ladis. 1316 cloped. 1369 seide. 1374 seip. 1376 loue. 1388 slow . 1409 wepe. 1412 Dame 1415 loue. 1439 hirself. 1457 is. 1459 peine . 1461 haltres . 1466 told 1470 paramours - 1471 lawe . 1474 ianglinge . 1489 take. 1490 loue 149 herte . 1492 mariage 1496 children. 1497 mai. 1499 tarie . 1501 let . 1512 god . seide. 1532 opre - 1534 ferste . 1535 dovhter. 1536 clopes . 1547 Tohewe - 1560 seip . 1561 point $\cdot$ 1566 maidenhod. 1567 had. 1591 come 1592 dej.

GOWER'S ENGLISH WORKS

He. Harleian 3869, Brit. Museum. Contains the same as F, with some religous poems in a defferent hand on blanks at the beginming and end. Paper, except outer leaves of each quire, f. 368 (including foar leaves at the beginning and two at the end with religious poems as above mentioned, $11 \frac{7}{} \times 7 \frac{1}{2}$ in., in quires of 16 (Lsually), with signatures, first quire beginning $f, 5$ and baving 14 leaves. Written in single column of $3^{8} .50$ lines, rather irregularly. Latin summaries in margin (red). On f. 5 at the beginming of the Confessio Antantrs a large picture of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, like that in $F$, on $f .8$ an ill-panted picture of the Confessman.

On f. I we find written' London $y^{\text {e }} 28$ Jany. 1628. George Cor'tluy, and on f. 2 'Jan, 22. 1721 Oxford' (1.e. Harley). On the same page is the date, ' $1445 y^{6} 23$ of May.'

This MS. appeare to be copied directly from $F$, and gives an excellent text, reproducing that of the Fairfax MS. with considerable accuracy, and for the most part copying also tts mistakes and peculianties, as Prol. 8o officie, 249 wich. 419 coml, 588 sende, 59 a befaile, 6088 marg. diminuntur, 723 chitualrie, 1078 waxed, i 120 tuisshide, 160 scheo, 227 beleft, 234 sone sone, 335 whilon, 1626 vosemylieste, 251 Embroudred, u. 352 Ennvie. Lmf. ofter $3^{80}$ infutsen, 7 to here, 949 fong, 169 no, 1445 keste, 1539 om. Whe, and so on. Some obvious mistakes are corrected, however, as Prol. 37o, i. 1257, 2105, 3357 , II, $11 \%$.
N. New College, Oxf. 266 (Bem. Cat. i. 2. 1230). Cinfessio Antantis with 'Explocit' isix lines) and 'Quam conxere.' Parchment, ff. 183 (orgıratly 187 ), $13 \frac{1}{4} \times 9$ in., quires of 8 (one of 10 and the last 9) with catchuords. Well written in double column of $4^{5}$ hines usually, sometimes more, first quarter fifteenth cent. Iatin summatles in margin. Many foreated pages \{half borders) and iliumimated capitals, well executed. Also a large number of miniatares, of which some lave been cut out and others much damaged.

The first two leaves are damaged, and four leaves have been cut Out, viz, the original f. 7 (1'rol. 1066-i. 106), f. 35 (1.1. 1521 1704), f. 74 (Iv. 2229-2397) and f. 113 (v. 5505 5662), also the outer half of f .17 t (vali. 271-3181 and several mintatures with text at the back.

The name of John Cutt of Schenley, Hertfordshire, appears in the book (late fifteenth cent.), and on the first leaf 'Thomde Mastin Liber,' perhaps the Thomas Martun who was Fellow of New College 15381553, and died in 1584. The binding of oid black leather has stamped upon it the letters W. D., with a double-headed eagle crowned.

This book seems to be derived from $F$, though perhaps not immediately. The orthograplizy us hike that of $F$, but differs in some points, as ' shal," 'she.' \&e, for 'schal,' 'sche,' nohs ' for 'noght,' besides being very uncertain about final e, often to tie destruction of the metre. As examples of particular correspondence wall $E$ we may note Prol 370 argumeten, 588 schd, 592 betalle, 723 claualric, 957 mustormeth, 1.120 wisshude, 227 beleft, 234 sone zone, 1036 be shrewed, 3357 seled, ii. $3^{18} \mathbf{f}$. fela, felaw, felawh (varying as $F$ ), aftor $3^{82}$ infamen, \&c., but sometimes $F$ is corrected in small matters, as Prol. 201 erthly, 249 which, 280 pacience, i. 1 ro to fare, \&cc.

The feature of the book is the series of miniatures, illustrating it throughout. In this respect it is unique, so far as I know, though other copies similarly illustrated must once have existed. The following is a complete list of the subjects (leaves cited by original number): f. 15 (i. 1417) Florent and the old woman, f. 18 (i. a021) man blowing trumpet, lord, wife, and five children looking out of a castle, f. 23 (i. 2785) cut out, f. 24 (i. 3067) cut out and sewn in, much damaged, f. 30 (ii. 587) cut out, f. 44 (ii. 3187) mothers bringing babies to Constantine, f. 56 (iii. 1885) Clytemnestra torn by horses, two crowned persons conversing in the foreground, f. 59 (iii. 2363) Pirate brought before Alexander, f. 6I (iv. y) Dido killing herself, Eneas riding away, f. 68 (iv. 1245) lady with halters and red bridle questioned by Rosiphelee, f. 71 (iv. 1815) cut out, f. 72 (iv. 2045) fight between Hercules and Achelous, f. 77 (iv. 2927) Alceone in bed dreaming, body of king in the water, f. 83 (v. 14I) Midas at table, f. 93 (v. 203I) Crassus having gold poured down his throat, f. 94 (v. 2273) king opening coffers, f. 95 (v. 2391) cut out, f. 96 (v. 2643) cut out, f. 98 (v. 2961) almost defaced, f. 100 (v. 3247) cut out, f. 109 (v. 4937) Bardus pulling Adrian out of the pit, f. 1 II (v. 523x) Ariadne left sleeping, ship sailing away, f. 117 (v. 6225) a procession of naked nymphs to bathe, f. 120 (v. 6807) cut out, f. 133 (vi. 139r) Telegonus supporting his father's head, guards lying dead, f. 136 (vi. 1789) cut out, f. 150 (vii. 1783) cut out, f. 158 (vii. 3417) cut out, f. 159 (vii. 3627) Gideon and his men blowing trumpets, &c., enemy asleep in a tent, f. 165 (vii. 4593) cut out, f. 171 (viii. 27r ff.) half the page cut away, with probably three miniatures, for only 52 lines are gone, whereas there was space for 92.
K. Keswicr Hall, near Norwich, in the possession of J. H. Gurney, Esq., who most kindly sent it to Oxford for my use. Contains the same as F, but is slightly imperfect at the end. Parchment, ff: 189, $13 \times 98$ in., quires of 8 with catchwords. Well written in double column of 46 lines (corresponding column for column with $F$ throughout), apparently in six different hands, of which the first wrote quires 1, 2, 6, 8-11, 21, the second 3 and perhaps 7 , the third $4,5,16,17$, the fourth $12-15,19$, the fifth 18, and the sixth 20, 22-24. Latin summaries in the margin (sometimes omitted). Three leaves are lost in the seventh quire (iii. 1087-1632), and one at the end, containing the last thirteen lines of the Latin Carmen de multiplici, \&c., with probably the account of the books and the piece 'Eneidos, Bucolis.' A floreated initial to each book, and space left for miniatures on ff. 1 and 7 . Old stamped leather binding.

Former possessors, Thomas Stone 'of Bromsberrowe in the County of Glouc.', Henry Harman, William Mallowes (Q. Elizabeth's reign ?), John Feynton.

The various hands differ very much from one another in correctness. The first and the fourth give a text so closely corresponding to that of $F$, that it is almost impossible not to believe that it is copied from it. In the case of some of the other hands this exact corrcspondence in detals of spelling and punctuation disappears, and a much less correct text is given, but this seems chefly due to carelessmess the third hand, for example, is evidently inaccurate and much neglects the metre). At the same time th must be noted that K has the marginal note at the beginning of the Prologue, which is wanting in $F$, 'Hic in principio,' &e., and there are some readings which seem to be derived from onother source, as 1.t, 778, 906, 9a1, 1732, 1832 (all in the seventh qure), where there is agreement with AM. On the whole the question of the dependence of K upon F must be left doubtful.

Wecan trace to tis's MS a grod many of the mistakes whichappear in Ha and the Magdalen MS, and found their way sometimes thus into pronted editions, e g Prol, 160 bothe, 260 to make manhode, 3570 om liss, $1 \mathrm{i}, 7^{8}$ fader, $10 r$ hem wolde, 103 all hys cause, 126 he, 135 pore, 138 wich, 160 In , orginally The). The cause of the great increase of error about the beginning of the second book is the appearance on the scene of the careless third hand, which on $f, 40$ (for example) in its last ten lines has at least twenty variations in spelling, \&ce, from the text of $F$, whale the first hand restiming has not a single one in its first eighteen lines. Indeed, whole columns may be found on the parts copied by the first or the fourth hand which do not differ from $F$ in the smallest particular, eather of speling or pumetuation.

 regularly written in double column of 49 lines, in a large pointed hand of the middle fifteenth cent. Latin summanies in the text (red). Large capitals finely illuminated and pages bordered at the beginning of the books (the first page especially is richly decorated, but has suffered damage), also illuminated tutes, 'I, iber Primus,' &c., at the head of each page.

The book has lost more than fifty leaves, 11z. one leaf after each of the following, f. 25 (i. 3322-it. 46), f. 55 (in. 1908-2103), f. 6I (iv. 400576), f. 78 (iv. $3701-\mathrm{v} .16 \mathrm{t}$ ), f. 110 (v. $6183-6360$ ), and f. 118 (vi. Laim Verses i. 4-182), twelve leaves after f.126 (vi $1571-111.1405$, four after f. 131 (vii. 2354-3088), and thinty or more after f. 134, from wi.j. 359 4 to the end of the book.

On the first page 'Oxford B. II.'
This is a very lavge and magnificent volume, written on fine parchment, doubtless for some distingu,shed person The text, however, is late and not very good. It is almost certain that it is derived ultmately from the Keswick MS. The evdeace of this is as fohlows: (I) M.stakes made in that MS nre bearly regilarly reprodaced in Ho. Some instances have been referred to th the account of K : we may ald here that where K omits the Latun summartes in a part of the seventh book, e.g. vit 1641 -1884, 19:7$2765, \mathrm{H} 1$ does the same, and where vasiants apparently from the AM group appear in K , as :11. 778, 906, 921, 1732 , they are found ajso in H9. (a, The inequality whach is to be observed in the text of Hi, some parts being much Jess cotrect than others, corresponds in the main with the difference of hands in K. This we find that a great crop of error springs up in ths from the point where the third hand of $\mathbf{K}$ begins, the preceding portion of the text being very fairly correct, and so to some extent elsewhere. For example, in v. 917-1017 (a part written in K by the first hand) there are about eight metrical faults in a hundred lines, while in vi. 183-283 (written in $K$ by the third hand), there are at least twenty-five. (3) In a certain part of the third book $\mathrm{H}_{3}$ suddenly ceases to follow the third recension text, and almost regularly gives the readings of the ERCLB group. This appears first in iii. 1088 and ceases to be the case after iii. 1686, thus remarkably corresponding with the gap caused in K by the loss of three leaves after iii. 1086. It is difficult not to believe that this very marked change was caused by the following of another MS. in a place where K was defective.

- The spelling of $\mathrm{H}_{3}$ is rather late: there is no use of $\beta$, and $y$ is used for $;$ in ' ye,' 'yiue,' \&c.

Magd. Magdalen College, OXf. 213 (Bern. Cat. i. 2.2354). Confessio Amantis with 'Explicit'(six lines) and Table of Contents in English (on two fly-leaves at the beginning and one at the end). Parchment, ff. $180+3$ (as above), $18 \frac{3}{2} \times 13 t$ in., in quires of 8 with catchwords: written in double column of 48 lines in a large hand of the middle fifteenth cent. something like that of Hs. Table of contents and columns 2, 3, 4 of f. 2 in a different hand. Latin summaries in text (red). Fine coloured letters with floreated half borders at the beginning of each book, and some neat drawing in connexion with the scrolls of the catchwords.

The book has lost one leaf after f. 22 (ii. 409-586) and eight after f. 88 (v. 701-2163). On f. $155 \mathrm{v}^{0}$ the MS. omits vii. 25 19-2695 without loss of leaf or blank.

Presented to the College by Marchadin Hunnis in 1620. A note by the present Librarian states that he was elected a demy of the College in 1606, appointed second master of the College Grammar School in 1610, and dismissed from that office as 'insufficiens' in Dec. 1611. The book is reported missing in Coxe's catalogue.

This MS. is in many points like Hs in its text, and must certainly have the same origin, both being perhaps derived from a MS. dependent on K . It reproduces most of the corruptions which we find in H , adding many others of its own, and it has the same readings in the third book which we have already noted in Hs.

A point of interest about this MS. is its apparent connexion with Caxton's edition. It seems evident that among the MSS. from which Caxton worked (and he had three at least) was either this very copy or one so like it as to be practically undistinguishable. Of this we shall say more when we speak of Caxton's edition.

catchwords: written in column of $30-48$ lines (without ruling) in two hands, of which the first wrote up to iv. 2132, and the other from thence to the end. Latin summaries in margin, but sometimes onitted or cut short. Some decoration of the first page of the text in black and red ; capitals, titles, &c, is red.

Three leaves are lost in the Conf. Amantis, containing Prcl. 728794, iv. 2386-2473, and v, 1-78, and several also at the end of the volume. There is great confusion in the text of the Prologue, which goes as follows : $1-92,499-860$ (with loss as above), 93-144, 86t-1044, 145-498, and then 1045 ff . This is not produced by any disarrangement of leaves in the present MS., but a consuderable dislocation of quixes has taken place in a later part of the volume, seven quires of the fourth and fifth books having been taken out of their proper place and bound up between vi. 2132 and 2133 .

This book was evidently witten for one John Dedwood, since his name and device, a piece of the trunk of a dead tree, occur as part of the decorations of the first page. The two blanks at the beginning are written over with a list of Mayors and Sheriffs for a senes of years, and these prove to be those of the city of Chester from the year 1469-1498 (see Ormerod's Kisf. of Cheshire, i. 211 f .). The name of Jobn Dedwood occurs among these as Sheriff in the year 1481 and as Mayor in 1483 (but the record in the MS. is here damaged). He had also been Mayor in 1468 . We may therefore suppose that the MS. dates from about 1470 . The name Troutbecke occurs several times (with other names) in the bonk, and later (1765) it belonged to Rich. Warner of Woodford Row, Essex.

The first hand of this MS. is cramped and ugly, varying a good deat in sze, the secund is neat and umform. The text is late and full of mistakes, and the speiling bad, eten such forms as 'loves,' ' beres,' 'gos' being quite common for 'loveth;' \&c., and often of or -us as a paticiple termination, -despeyret,' ' resignet, " weddut,' 'cleput,' \&c. A certain interest attaches to the MS. however from the fact that it seems to be clearly independent of $F$ as well as of the KH group. While agreeng with $F$ completely in form of text, and supporting it also as a rule against the mistakes of KH , it has a considerable number of readngs which belong to the first recension uncortected type, and in other cases it agrees apecially with B. Instances of the former are to be found in Prol. 159, i. 8, and 198 ${ }_{4}, 5104$, vin. $510,2342,2925$, \& C. These, with others of a simitar kind, scattered through the whole book, seem to be of the nature of accidental suruvals, a first recension cony (the remote ancestor of W) having leen altered by collation with one resembing $F$. W agrees with apparent mistakes of $F$ and the rest of the third recension in some passages, as in. 446 , $1 \mathrm{v} 2867,2973$, vil 5135 , vui. 1069,1999 , but supports what is apparently the true read.ng nganast them in Prol. 1078, 1. 1008, 11. 2899, 2537, Hii. 1605, v. 2906, \&c. In most of these last instances $W$ merely remains in agreement with the first recension, where F, \&c. depart from it, therefore its testimony may be of an accidental character.

The list of Mayors and Sheriffs of Chester on the first pages has perhaps some local interest, as it is contemporary and probably made by a responsible person. Comparing it with that given in Ormerod's Hist. of Cheshim, we find several differences, as 'Ric. Sadler' for 'Rich. Smith' as one of the Sheriffs of 1475, 'John Monkesfelde, Rob. Pleche,' Sheriffs for 1478, 'Mathewe Hewse' for 'Mathew Johnson,' 1479, 'Rychard Kir e' for 'Rich. Barker,' 149a. The same pages have some notes about current historical events, as (under 1469), 'The which yere were hedet the lorde Wellybe and the lorde Well. his son for the grete insurreccion and rysing of the Comyns of the Counte of Lyncolne. Also the same yere entred our Souereyne and moste noble Prince Kynge Edward now reynynge,' &c. Under 1470 is a note of the battles of Barnet and Tewkesbury, and at 1476 the record of a visit to Chester of 'our Souereigne lorde Prince,' who stayed there from Christmas to Easter.

Parchment, ff. 206, $12 \times 9$ in., in quires first of 6 and then usually of 8 (lettered) ; double column of 42-48 lines, untidy writing. Has lost $k_{4}$ (iii. 1314-1475), $n 2$ (iv. 2118-2268), s 2 (v. 51695333), t2 (v. 6774-6914), and five or six at the end (after viii. 2408). Copied from Caxton's edition, including the Table of Contents and the confusion in leaf numbering.

Besides these, there are several MSS. which contain selections from the Confessio Amantis, as Harl. 7333, Brit. Museum, which, besides the Canterbury Tales and other things, has seven stories from the Conf. Amantis, viz. f. 120 Tereus (v. 5551 ff.), f. 122 Constance (ii. 587 ff.), f. 126 The Three Questions (i. 3067 ff.), f. $127 \mathrm{v}^{\circ}$ The Travellers and the Angel (ii. 291 ff.), f. 127 vo Virgil's Mirror, f. 128 vo The Two Coffers, f. 129 The Beggars and the Pasties, \&c. (v. 2031-2498). Parchment, large folio, column of 66 lines, no Latin. These stories are in the same hand as the Cant. Tales, which go before, and the Parlement of Foules, which follows them. The text is that of the first recension unrevised : a very poor copy.

Contaias a miscellancous collection of verse and grose, with memofanda \& c., all, or nearly all, apparently in the hand of the owner of the book, one Richard 11 ill of Langley, Herts, who has registered on f. 21 (25) the birth of his seven children, from the year 1518 to 1526 , and has kept a short yournal of public events which ends with the year 1536 . Among the extracts are several stories from the Confessio Amantts, neatly written, about $54-60$ lines to the page, with no Latin. These extend over about 46 leaves of the book and are as follows (leaves by old numbermg): ff. $5570 \mathrm{v}^{0}$ Tale of Appolnts, viii. 271-2028, ff. $70 \mathrm{v}^{6}-8 \mathrm{t} \mathrm{v}^{\circ}$ Tates of Constance and of Perseus, ii, 587 1865, ff. 81 v $v^{0}-83$ v va Adrian $^{0}$ and Bardus, v. 4937 5162, ff. 83 vo -84 vo, vi. 485595 , ff. 84 v $^{0}-86$ v $^{0}$

Phillipps 22914 is reported as a fragment (four leaves) containaty Comfossio Amundis, v. 775-1542.

Nine good miniatures cut out of a MS. of the Comf. Amanfis are in the possession of Mr. A. H. Frere, who kindly allowed me to see then. They are as follows. (1) Teteus, (2) Codrus, (3) Socrates and his wife, (4) Dives and Lazarus, (5) Roman Trumph, (6) L'j)sses and Telegonus, (7) The Three Questions, (8) Lycurgus takmg an oath from the Athemans $1^{2}$, ( $($ ) King on a quay with bales and gold vessels, tpparently landed from a ship near, perbaps Apollonius landing at Tarsis. Several of the pictures represent more than one scene of the story, as that of Tereus, in which we have the king at meat presented with the head of his son, while there are three birds in the background and the scene of the outrage on Philomene on the left; and again in (4), where the rich man and his wife are sitting at table and refusing food to the beggar, while in the background on the right an angel is receiving the soul of the dying Lazarus.
These miniatures are supposed to have belonged to Sir John Fenn, editor of the Paston Letters. The MS. from which they were cut seems to have been of the middle of the fifteenth cent.
Evidence is afforded of one other large and well written MS. of the Conf. Amantis by a fragment of parchment in the Shrewsbury School Library, of which a photograph has most kindly been sent to me by Dr. Calvert of Shrewsbury. It contains about 70 lines of the Prologue, viz. 189-195 (with the Latin), 224-244, 274-294, 323-343. The leaf to which it belonged must have measured at least $15 \frac{1}{\frac{1}{2}} \times 1 \frac{1}{2} \mathrm{in}$., and was written in double column of 50 lines.
Three other MSS. are mentioned in the Catalogue of 1697 (vol. ii. pt. 1), viz. 611 ' John Gower's Old English Poems' with 'S. Anselmi Speculum Religiosorum,' at Naworth Castle, which I strongly suspect is identical with Harl. $3490\left(\mathrm{H}_{3}\right), 4035$, 'Goweri Confessio Amantis, Fol. magn.,' belonging to Ric. Brideoake, Esq., of Ledwell, Oxon., and 6974, 'Jo. Gower's Poems, fol.,' belonging to Sir Henry Langley of the County of Salop (i.e. of the Abbey, Shrewsbury).

The average excellence of the Gower MSS. stands high, and there is a surprisingly large proportion of well written and finely decorated copies, which attain to more than a respectable tandard of correctness. Manuscripts such as $L$ or $B 2$, which stand in the third rank among copies of the Confessio Amantis, would take a very different place among the authorities for any of Chaucer's works, second only to the Ellesmere MS. if they were copies of the Canterbury Tales, and easily in the first place if it were a question of the Legend of Good Women or the Hous of Fame. It is evident not only that Gower was careful about the text of his writings, but also that there was some organized system of reproduction, which was wanting in the case of Chaucer.

Version. It remains to say something of the Spanish prose version of the Confessio Amantis, which exists in manuscript in the Library of the Escorial (g. ii. 19). Information about this was first given me by Mr. J. Fitzmaurice-Kelly, and since then by the learned Librarian of the Escorial, Fr. Guillermo Antolin, O.S.A., who most obligingly sent me an account of it. The Catalogue (1858) thus describes the book: - Confision del amante, libro así intitulado compuesto por Juan Goer natural del Reyno de Englaterra, e tornado en lengua Portuguesa por Roberto Payn ó Payna canónigo de la ciudad de Lisboa, e despues fué puesto en lenguaje castellano por Juan de Cuenca natural de Huete.

Cod, escrito en papel el año de 1400 , fol. menor. pasta.' The statement about the author and the translators is taken from the beginning of the translation itself. It seems to be rather impled that the Casthian version made by Juan de Cuenca was based upon the Portuguese of Robert Payn, no doubt an Englishman. The present Libranan adds that it is a book of 411 leaves, and of the end of the fourteenth or beginning of the fifteenth cent.

The translation was made from a copy of the first recension. So far as 1 can judge by the extracts with which the Libraman has furnished me, it is a tolerably close version. For example, Prol. 22 ff . 'e por que pocos escriven en lenguaje yngles yo entiendo de componer en el un lybro a onrra del Rey ritcardo cuyo sugebto yo so en todo obedescimiento de mi coraçon, como dicho sugebto puede y deue a sul dicho señor, . . . asy fue que un tiempo acaescio como avía de ser ģue yo yendo en un batel a rremos por el rrio de atenas que va a la cibdad de noua troya . . . y yo estonces falle por ventura a este mi señor e luegn como me vido mando que fuese a una barca en que el venma, y entre otras cosas que me dixo,' &c. Editions. The Confessio Amantis has been already six times printed, viz, by Caxton, by Berthelette (twice), in Chalmers' English Poets, by Pauli, and by Prof. Henry Morley. All the later editions are dependent, directly or indirectly, on Bertheicte.

Caxton printed the Conf. Amanis in 1483 . His text is a composite one, taken from at least three MSS. At first he follows a copy of the third recension, either the Magdalen MS. itself or one remarkably like it, and he continues this for more than half the book, up to about v. 4500 . Then for a time he seems to follow a second recension copy, etther alone or in combination with the other, but from about v. 6400 to the end he prints from a mantscript of the unrevised first recension, inserting however the addutional passages in the seventh book and the concluston (after the Chaucer greeting) from one of his other MSS. The account of the books 'Qua vnusquisque ' at the end is from a first recension MS. The pronciple, no doubt, was to include as much as possible, but two of the adititonal passages, v. $7015^{\circ}-7036^{\circ}$ and $7086^{\circ}-7210^{\circ}$, were omitted, probably by oversight, whle a first recension copy was being followed. The later form of epilogue was perhaps printed rather than the other because it is longer. Caxton prints the lines at the end of the Prologue, which are given only by $\Delta$, and there are some other indications that he had a MS. of this type ; but he had also one of the AdBT group, which alone contain vii. $2329^{}-2340^{}$ and $3149^{}-$ 3180.

On f. exvi vo Caxton still agrees with Magd. almost regularly, e.g. v. 4450 And myn hap 4454 is not trouble 4465 But for that 4467 ne shall yeue and lene 4484 doo 4503 A good word, whereas on f. exvii he differs repeatedly, e.g. 4598, 453a, 4543, 4555, 4560, 457a, and seems never to be in full agreement after this. That he is following a first recension copy after about v. 6400 is clear from the unbroken series of readings belonging to this class which he exhibits. The text generally is very poor and the metre extremely bad.

Berthelette in 1532 printed the Conf. Amantis from a MS. very closely resembling B. He did not venture, however, to substitute the preface which he found in his copy for that to which Caxton had given currency, but merely expressed surprise that the printed copies should deviate so much from the MSS., and printed separately that which his manuscript gave. He also takes from Caxton the lines at the end of the Prologue, the additionalthird recension passages, Prol.495-498, 579-584, i. 1403-1406, 2267-2274, 2343-2358, 2369-2372 ${ }^{1}$, and also the Chaucer greeting, viii. 2941-2960*, but he has overlooked v. 7701-7746. He inserts of course all the additional passages in v . and vii, as he found them in his MS., loudly protesting against Caxton for omitting 'lynes and columnes, ye and sometyme holle padges.'

Berthelette's text is better than Caxton's, but his manuscript must have been decidedly inferior in correctness to $B$.

The second edition, 1554, is a reprint of the first, column for column, in different type. A few mistakes are corrected, and the spelling is somewhat changed, especially by substitution in many cases of $i$ for $y$.

Chalmers published the Conf. Amantis in vol. ii. of the collection of British Poets, 1810 , taking the text from Berthelette's edition of 1554.

Pauli professed to follow Berthelette's first edition with collation throughout of MSS. Harl. 7184 and 3869 , and occasional reference to Harl. 3490 and the Stafford MS. It is almost impossible that this full collation can really have been made, for by it nearly all Berthelette's errors might have been corrected, whereas we find them as a matter of fact on every page of Pauli's edition. As to the critical judgement of the editor, it is enough to say that he regarded Ilarl. 7184 as a better authority for the text and spelhng than etther Harl. 3569 or the btafford MS. (being attracted apparently by the external masnoncence of the volume), and that he actually pronounced it to be of the fourteenth cent. His dingence may be measured by the fact that because Harl 3490 stops short at visi, $3062^{* \prime}$ (in the middle of a sentence), bemg left unfinished by the scribe, therefore Pauli's edttion amts the remainder of this conclusion, $3063^{} 3114^{ 1}$, though he had the MS. in the Royal Library ( R ) within his reach, by means of which he tught have completed his copy. He is also seriously maccurate in the statements which he makes about the Stafford MS. as regards the addtional passages.

clxx GOWER'S ENGLISH WORKS

A certain number of the errors in Berthelette's edttion are corrected, but very many remain, and in some cases further corruptron has been introduced by the editor, either from Harl. 7184 or otherwise. The orthography has been 'restored,' but hardly uith success.

Morley ( 1889 ) followed Paulh's text, with conjectural alterations of his own, and a few corrections from Berthelette, as i. 773. Often the changes are quite wrong, e.g. Prol. 82, 603, i. 777, 1675 f., 2957 f., the most extraordinary perhaps being iv. 2.108 f . The edtor professes to omit ni. 142-338 and a few lines here and there in other places. The omissions, howerer, are much more extensive than this seems to imply. In the fourth book alone they are as follows, $401-408,428-436$, 443-506, $516-523,1467-1475,1490$ 1594, 2131-2182, $2754-2770$, 2858-2862, 2883-2888, $3: 81-3302$, and in some cases it is impossible evea to conjecture on what principle they are made.

The Present Edition, The text follows the Bodleian Fairfax MS. and every deviation from this is noted. The critical apparatus is constructed upon the following principles.

Three manuscripts have been collated throughout with the text of F, viz. Bodley 902 (A), Corpus Christi Coll. 67 (C), and Bodley 294 (B). These are selected to represent respectively the first recension revised, the first recension unrevised, and the second recension texts. A is an excellent copy, the best of its class, C is a carefully written MS., the best of the group to which it belongs, with the exception of Egertun 1991, and B, besides beng a good copy [^26]and almost the only second recension MS. which is not imperfect, has perhaps a special claim to attention because its text is of the type which all the editions except that of Caxton have followed. In all cases where variation has been found, except where it is merely of form and spelling or of a very trifing and accidental kind, the readings of at least fourteen other selected copies have been ascertained, and by this procedure those variations which are merely individual have been distinguished from those which are shared by a class or a group. The result is given in the critical notes, all the variations of $A$ and $B$ being there cited except those that are very trifling ${ }^{1}$, while the readings of C are usually given only when shared by some other manuscript.

It is important that it should be observed which the manuscripts are which have thus been referred to and how their evidence is cited. They are divided always according to their recension, first, second or third, and they are cited in an unvarying order, as follows : AJMH ${ }_{1} \mathrm{X}(\mathrm{G}) \mathrm{ERCLB}_{2}$, SAdBT $\Delta$, FWH $_{3}$ (or K), so that A . . . B2 means the whole series of the first class, and S . . . $\Delta$ that of the second, while $H_{1} \ldots B_{2}$ stands for $H_{3} X(G) E R C L B_{2}$, and E . . . B2 for ERCLB. These nineteen (or eighteen) manuscripts are present as witnesses throughout, whether named or not ; for when the manuscripts are named which give a variation, it is to be assumed that the remainder have the reading of the text. must be taken to imply that 'wisdom' is the reading of AJM, SAdBTA, FW and 'wordes' of $\mathrm{H}_{1}$ XGERCLB ${ }_{2}$, $\mathrm{H}_{3}$ :

means that the reading of the text, 'goodly,' is given by every one of the nineteen except B :

\text { ' } 1318 \text { How per(e) } \mathrm{H}_{2} G \ldots \mathrm{~B}_{2} \text { ' } means that the reading of the text is that of AJMX, SAdBTA, $\mathrm{FWH}_{3}$ and that of the note belongs to $\mathrm{H}_{1} G E R C L B_{2}$ :

 GOWER'S ENGLISH WORKS$$
\text { ' } 3340 \text { tho] pe AM . . . By' }

stands for the fact that all the first recension copies except J vary from $F$, while the rest agree. Occasionally readings of other MSS. are cited besides those mentioned above, as $\mathrm{Y}, \mathrm{A}$ or Magd., but the absence of such citation nust not be taken to imply anything.

It must be observed, however, that in some cases a more limited reference seemed desirable, especially on matters of form and spelling, pounts about which it would be idle to adduce any evidence but that of a few copies. Where selection of this kund is employed, the manuscripts on both sides are cited: thus such notes as

\begin{aligned}
& \quad 3691 \text { set AJ, S, F Fette C, B,' } \\
& \hline 4307 \text { all S, F }{ }^{2} \text { a } \mathrm{A}, \mathrm{~B} \text { ' }

must not be taken to imply the reading of any copy except those mentioned. In a few cases this form is used to avoid misunderstanding in passages where the record of readings is for some reason incomplete, as i. 2300 , viil. $566,1713.1927$.

In citing a variation as given by a class or group of MSS, no attempt is made to give the spelling of each one scparately. The form cited is that giten etther by the majority or by a leading MS. with varations sometımes added in parentheses.
Attention should be paid also to the following points: (1) It was not found possible to complete the collation of the Glasgow MS. (G) before the text was printed, and consequently its readngs must not be taken as umplied, when nut mentioned, any further than v . 1970. The collation has stace been completed and some of the results are noted in the account of the MS. (z) K takes the place of H in vi. 1671 vii. 1405 , and vil. 3594 to the end, where $\mathrm{H} s$ is defective. (3) Before assuming the evidence of any MS. ex silentoo it is necessary that the reader should assure bimself that it is not defective in the part concerned. The means of doing this are fully afforded by the accounts given of the separate MSS, where their imperfections are noted, and it must be remembered that J and Ad are for the most part defective as regards the Latin summaties, and that this is the case with T also in certain parts. The readings of $S$ on $f .50$ are for the most part passed over, as not originally belonging to that MS. (4) A few abbreviated Latin terms are used in the critical notes, as in ras, to indrcate that the text is written over an erasure, or $\delta, m$. to denote the read.ng of the first hand.

The lines are numbered in each book (for the first time), and the numbers with an aster,sk attached are those of the lines in other recensions than that of the text. In addition to this it should be observed that as nearly all references to Gower for the last forty years have been made by Pauli's edition, it has been thought advisable to place in the margin of this text indications of the volumes and pages of that edition: thus P. I. 153 stands for 'Pauli, vol. i. p. 153.'

Setting aside matters of spelling, punctuation and grammatical form, we may note that the material differences of reading between the text of this edition and that of Pauli are in number about two thousand.

Other English Works. With regard to the text of the poem In Praise of Peace all that need be said will be found in the notes upon it. The Trentham MS., which contains it, has already been fully described in the volume of 'French Works.'

A poem in five seven-line stanzas, beginning 'Passe forthe pou pilgryme and bridel wele py beste,' occurs in (Shirley's) MS. Ashmole 59, f. 17 vo (Bodl. Libr.), with the title 'Balade moral of gode counseyle made by Gower.' The same without the final stanza (owing to loss of a leaf) occurs in MS. Rawlinson C. 86, but with no title or ascription of authorship, and both texts have been printed (not quite correctly) by Dr. Karl Meyer in his John Gower's Besiehungen, &c., 1889 . In addition to these copies there is one in the British Museum MS. Addit. 29729, which has been published by Dr. Max Förster in the Archiv für das Studium der neueren Sprachen, vol. 102, p. 50. In this MS. the piece is ascribed to Benedict Burgh, and it is called ' A leson to kepe well the tonge.'

It is almost impossible that these verses can have been written by Gower, but out of deference to Shirley's authority (which is not very weighty however), and in order that the reader may judge, it is printed here, all deviations from the Ashmole text being noted, except in the case of 'th' for ' p ,' and some readings of the Rawlinson copy ( $R$ ) being added in parentheses.

Balade moral of gode counseyle made by Gower.

> Passe forth, thou pilgryme, and bridel wel thy beeste;
> Loke not agein for thing that may betyde;
> Thenke what thou wilt, but speke ay with the leeste;
> Avyse thee wel who stondeth thee besyde;
> Let not thyne herte beo with thy tonge bewryde;
> Trust not to muche in fayre visayginge,
> For peynted cheere shapeth efft to stynge.

Remember eke that what man doth amiss,
Thou hast or art or may be suche as he is.
This is full of lines that Gower would not have written, with superfluous syllables in the metre, as ll. 1, 5, 10, 17, 29, 33, 35 (omitting those that might pass with amended spelling), accent on weak syllables, as $11.20,25,26,3$ r, defective rhyme, as 'besyde': 'bewryde' (participle), and 'feere' (companion) : 'bere,' or suppression of syllable at the beginning, as in 1. 12. The form 'mayst ' (maist) for 'miht' is not found in any respectable Gower MS. Moreover the style is not that of Gower, but evidently imitated from Chaucer's poem ' Fle from the pres.'

[Pope Boniface.]

NOTES

PROLOGUS

Latin Verses. i. 1 f. The author acknowledges his incapacity for higher themes, as at the beginning of the first book. The subject of the present work is a less exalted one than that of those which preceded it.

3 f. Qua tamen &c. The couplet may be translated, 'Yet in that tongue of Hengist in which the island of Brut sings, I will utter English measures by the aid of Carmentis.'

5 f. Ossibus ergo carens &c. That is, 'Let the evil tongue be far away.' The reference is to Prov. xxv. 15, 'A soft tongue breaketh the bone,' taken here in a bad sense : cp. iii. 463 ff .
7. 'Moved by the example of these wise men of old.' For this use of 'ensampled' cp. Traitie, xv. 1. 4,
' Pour essampler les autres du present.'
13. Who that al &c. 'If one writes of wisdom only': a common form of expression in Gower's French and English both ; see note on Mirour, 1244. In English we have 'who that,' 'who so (that)' or 'what man (that),' sometimes with indic. and sometimes with subjunctive: cp. Prol. 460,550 , i. 383,481 , ii. 88, iii. 971,2508 , &c. See alṣo note on 1.460. writ, present tense, syncopated form.
16. if that ye rede, 'if ye so counsel me,' i.e. if you approve, equivalent to the 'si bon vous sembleroit' of the Mirour, l. 33.
24. The marginal note is wanting in $F$ and $S$, and may perhaps have been added after the year 1397, when Henry became Duke of Hereford cp. 'tunc Derbie comiti,' or even later, for in the Cron. Tripertita Gower calls him Earl of Derby at the time of his exile, using the same expression as here, 'tunc Derbie comiti.' Caxton, followed by

24*-92*. For this variation see the Introduction. The text of B, which is here followed, is as good as any other, but none of the copies which give the passage are thoroughly good in spelling, and the text has in this respect been slightly normalized. A and $E$ are here defective, Berthelet, gives the following: 'Hic in primis declarat Ioannes Gower quam ob causam presentem libellum composuit et finaliter compleuit, An. regni regis Ric. secundi 16.'

31. That is, compared with what it was in former time : cp. 1. 133.
41. write ... stode: subjunctive. For the subjunctive in indirect question cp. ii. 1243, 1943, iii. 708, 771, &c.
43. as who seith, i.e. 'as one may say,' a qualification of what follows, a gret partie': the phrase is a common one, e.g. i. 1381, 'as who seith, everemo,' 2794 , ii. 696, ' as who seith, ded for feere,' &c.
46. schewen, used absolutely, 'set forth their histories.'
52. a burel clerk, 'a man of simple learning,' esp. 'a layman'; cp. Chaucer, Cant. Tales, B 3145, D 1872 : 'burel' was a coarse cloth.
54. tok, 'took place,' 'existed': cp. Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 1562,
' And if so be that pees herafter take.'
So ' prendre' in French, e.g. Mir. 831,
' Le mariage devoit prendre.'
and J, which is the best available MS., has eccentricities of spelling (' Richardus,' 'wyche,' 'hyt,' 'hys,' ' aftur,' 'resonabul,' ' zef,' 'be heste,' 'be ginne,' &c.), which make it rather unsuitable as a basis for the text. It will be found however that J and B mutually correct each other to a great extent, and we have also MGRCL as additional witnesses of a respectable character. Thus in regard to some of the variations in spelling from $B$ we have as follows:-

24* bok J 25 belongep MC $27^{}$ euere JML $31^{}$ Preiende G Preiend MCL $36^{}$ betyde (betide) GCL $40^{}$ be JML $43^{}$ f. nyh : syh (sih) JL $47^{}$ f. seid : leyd J $49^{}$ besinesse J $51^{}$ boke JM 52* myhte loke J 53* f. wrytinge : comandinge J $55^{}$ herte JMGCL $59^{}$ wipoute GC $62^{}$ non JGC $65^{}$ handlep JMGL 66* preye (preie) JMGCL heuene JMG 69* befalle J 75* bit JMCL 80 longe JML $82^{}$ bok J $87^{}$ begynnep (beginnep) ML 89* f. bok: tok J $92^{*}$ begynne MCL.

34* ff. A very loosely constructed sentence. It means apparently, ' I consider how it befell, as a thing destined then to come to pass, namely that as on Thames I came rowing by boat &c., I chanced to meet my liege lord.' The disorder in which the clauses are thrown together is a feature which we shall notice elsewhere in our author's style. 'The toun of newe Troye' is of course London, supposed to have been founded by Brut of Troy, whence was derived 'Britain,' the 'insula Bruti' of the opening lines.

65*. There is here a corruption which affects all the existing copies. The various readings are given in the critical notes, and evidently 'outkrong' is that which has most support. I conjecture that the author wrote ' onwrong;' i.e. 'awrong,' which being an unusual word suffered corruption at the hand of the first transcriber, the ' $w$ ' being
72. the god, so 198, ii. 594 ; cp. 'the vertu,' 116, 'the manhode,' 260 , 'the man,' 546,582 , 'The charite,' 319, & $c$.
74. ended, 'continued to the end.'

77 ff . Apparently a reference to the treatise on the duties of a ruler contained in the seventh book: 'I shall make a discourse also with regard to those who are in power, marking the distinction between the virtues and the vices which belong to their office.'
81 ff . 'But as my wit is too small to correct the faults of every one, I send this book unto my own lord Henry of Lancaster ... to be amended at his command.' For 'upon amendement to stonde' cp. ii. 583. The suggestion of amendment at the hands of the author's patron is of course a mere compliment, like that paid by Chaucer to Gower at the conclusion of Troilus, but it gives a modest appearance to the general censure.

It is not likely that the expression 'upon amendement' refers to the change made in this part of the text, to which the author would hardly have called attention thus. Also, unless we explain as above, the meaning would seem to be 'as my wit is too small to admonish every one, I send my work as now revised to my own lord Henry of Lancaster,' a much too pointed application of the coming admonitions.

It is hardly needful to add that 'to tellen every man his tale' is not a reference to the Canterbury Tales, as some have supposed.

Latin Verses. ii. 2. vertit in orbe, 'turns round,' as upon her wheel.
4. Cp. IIIf.
11. 'And thus those regions which were once the strongest fall into mistaken, as it easily might be, for 'tk': cp. Chaucer, H. of Fame, ii. 403, where 'tokne' is apparently a corruption of 'towne.'

66*. the hevene king, 'the king of hevene.' Gower regularly writes the final ' $e$ ' in 'hevene,' 'evene,' 'evere,' ' nevere,' &c. The preceding syllable is of course syncopated in pronunciation.
69*. what befalle, 'whatsoever may befall': cp. iii. 325, 'what it were.'

75*. bit, i. e. ' biddeth.'
85*. The true reading is probably 'listen pleie,' which is preferable both as regards form and construction: cp. iv. 3147, ' whan the wommen listen pleie.' The readings are as follows: 'listen pleye' J, 'lusten pleie' M, 'luste pley' $\mathrm{B}_{2}$; the rest mostly 'lust to pleye.' The verb seems usually to be followed by a preposition when used impersonally, as i. 147, 1403, and otherwise more generally not, as i. 2741, iv. 3147, but there are exceptions both ways, e. g. iv. 907 and iii. 111, iv. 3187.

90*. Cp. 54 ff.
92*. for to newe. This is the reading of the better MSS., and 'schewe' is probably the correction of a copyist who did not understand it. The word 'newe' means here 'produce,' but in 1. 59 ' neweth ' is intransitive and means 'comes into being.'
decay throughout the world, and have no centre of rest there.' (The first 'que' is the relative, for 'quae.') It is possible however that 'per orbem' may refer again to Fortune's wheel, cp. 138 ff., where the sense of this couplet seems to be expressed, and in that case the meaning is, 'fall into decay as they turn upon the wheel.'
116. the vertu : for this French use of the article, which is often found in Gower, see note on l. 72.

122 ff . 'And in witness of that I take the common voice of every land, which may not lie.' This appeal to the common voice, the 'commune dictum,' is characteristic of our author, who repeats the proverb ''Vox populi vox dei' several times in various forms, e.g. Mirour, 12725. For the use of 'that' in such expressions cp. 1. 907, and iv. 2040.
133. to loke &c., 'when we look on all sides': cp. 31, i. 1060, 2278, &c.
139. blinde fortune. 'Fortune' must here be taken as a proper name, and hence the definite form of adjective : cp. i. 3396, 'wyse Peronelle,' ii. 588, 272I, 'of grete Rome,' ii. 2304, 'false Nessus,' iii. 2100, 'false Egiste,' &c.
143. upon a weer, i. e. in doubt or distress : cp. iii. 1148, and Chaucer, House of Fame, 979,

'Tho gan I wexen in a wer.'

144 ff . 'And especially if the power of the rulers of the world be not kept upright by good counsel in such wise that' &c.
152. heved, always a monosyllable in the metre: the word also appears as ' hefd ' i. 199, and frequently as 'hed.'
154. her trowthe allowe, 'approve of their loyalty,' i.e. accept it.
155. 'And welcome them with all his heart.' For the position of the conjunction cp. 521, 756, 759, 1014, i. 854, 863, &c., and note on Mirour, 415 . Mr. Liddell points out to me that the same usage occurs frequently in the ME. Palladius.

156 (margin). The quotation is from Ecclus. xxxii. 24, 'Fili, sine consilio nihil facias.' This book is often cited as Solomon in the Mirour.
162. A truce with both France and Scotland was made for three years in 1389, but peace was not finally concluded till 1396.

166 f. Cp. Praise of Peace, 190.
172. at alle assaies, 'in every way': cp. ii. 2447.

Latin Verses. iii. 1. Iohannes: St. John the Evangelist, who is mentioned either as the teacher of brotherly love or because his Gospel contains the exhortations to St. Peter, 'Feed my sheep,' ' Feed my lambs.'
2. ista, 'this.'
3. bina virtute, perhaps charity and chastity, cp .464 ff .
4. inculta, nominative in spite of metre, so auaricia in 1.8 .
8. tepente, 'being lukewarm,' that is, held in a lukewarm manner.

196 (margin). Roberti Gibbonensis, Robert of Geneva, elected pope in opposition to Urban VI, under the title of Clement VII.
198. the god, see note on I. 72.
204. Simon, i. e. Simon Magus, whence simony has its name: cp. 442 ff., Mirour, 18451 ff., and Vox Clamantis, iii. 249, 1217, &c.
207 ff . The reference is to Lombard bankers employed as intermediaries in obtaining Church preferment. The 'letter' referred to is the papal provision, or perhaps the letter of request addressed to the pope in favour of a particular person : cp. Vox Clam. iii. 1375 f.,
' Littera dum Regis papales supplicat aures, Simon et est medius, vngat vt ipse manus.'
210. provende, equivalent to prebend, and in fact 'prebende' is a var. reading here. Littré quotes from Wace,
' Cil me dona et Diez li rende Baiex une provende,' and from Rutebeuf,
' Qui argent porte a Rome, asses tot provende a.'
212. 'The authority of the Church' (symbolized by the key) 'did not then lie at the mercy of armed bands or depend upon the issue of battle.' For 'brigantaile,' meaning bands of irregular troops, cp. Mir. 18675.
218. defence, 'prohibition': cp.iv. 1026, v. 1710, and Chaucer, Troil. iii. 138 , 'if that I breke your defence.'
220. 'was then no charge of theirs,' i. e. did not come under their authority: 'baillie' means the charge or government of a thing, as Trait. xi. 19, 'Le duc q'ot lors Ravenne en sa baillie,' hence a thing placed in a person's charge.
221. The vein honour: the definite form is rather less regularly used by Gower in adjectives taken from French than in others, e.g. iii. 889, 'For with here fals compassement'; but on the other hand, i. 864, 'the pleine cas,' ii .412 , ' And thurgh his false tunge endited,' and 824, 'This false knyht upon delay.'
246. is went : cp. iii. 878 and Chaucer, Cant. Tales, E 1013 , F 567.
247. here lawe positif: the 'lex positiva' is that which is not morally binding in itself, but only so because imposed by (ecclesiastical) authority: cp. Vox Clam. iii. 227 ff. This is naturally the sphere within which Church dispensations of all kinds take effect.
248. Hath set. Apparently 'set' is intransitive, 'Since their positive law bath set itself to make,' &c. There is no good authority for reading ' hire.'
252. There is hardly another instance of ' but' for 'bot' in F, and the form 'right' for 'riht' in the preceding line is very unusual.
260. the manhode, i.e. human nature: see note on 1.72. For 'thenkth' see note on 461.
263. withholde, 'retained as her servant.'
268. in the point &c., i. e. so soon as it is collected. The allusion is to the circumstances of the campaign of the Bishop of Norwich in

CONFESSIO AMANTIS

1385 ; cp. Frx Clum. ii. 373 (margin), and see Froissart (ed. Leitc. hovel, vol. x. p. 207.
278. That scholde be" Sce, i. e. the papacy, which by reason of the schism has become a cause of war and strife.
289. Grigoirc. The reference is to sich passages as Requla Pashi ralis, i, cap. 8,9 . The quotation in the margon at 1.208 is luosely taken from the Hambles on the Cospel (Magne, Fithot. vol, 76. p. 1125 , - Mercenarius quippe est qui locum quidem pastoris tenet, sed lucra animarum non quaert: terrenis commodis inhtat, honore praclatien ; gaudet, temporalious lucris pascitur, mpensa stbu ab hominibus reverentia latatur.' The idea expressed by 'non vt prosint sed tt presint' often occurs in Gregory's writug's, e.g. Reg. Past. ti. cap. 6, 'nec pracesse se hominibus gatudent sed prodesse."
299. Wamic: the final ' $e$ ' counts as a syllable and the preced.rg' vouel is absorbed; see note on 323 : but 'many' is also used as the plural.
305. Cp. Vox Clam. ini. 127!, 'In cathedram Moysi nunc ascendunt Pharise1,' and see Rom, de lu Rose, 11809 ft . (ed. Méon), Enjlalh version, 68S9 ff.
311. is noght forycte, an impersonal use, 'there is no forgetting'. c.. 338.
$3: 33$. Here 'studie' is reduced by elision to the value of a monos syllable: see note on Mirowr, 296. The rule applies to substantives ike 'accidie,' 'Mercune,' 'charie,' adjectives like 'mante' (1. 299), and verbs like 'studie,' "carie," 'tarje."
329. If Elhna brenne &.c. What is meant is the fire of Envy, ulin.h is often compared to that of Etna, ii. 20, 2337, &c.

338 f . The verb is used impersonally, 'there is cause for us a i i' be sorry.'
348. "it causeth this new sect to be brought in." The subject must be supplied from the previous clause.

366 f . That is, the various clamants to the papacy are sapported in various lands by national partiality or interest.

380 f . 'They use no other reasoning than this as to the peral of reltafon."
383. hss world, i. e. his fortune, cp. 108 I , i. $178, \& \mathrm{c}$.

308 f . That is, the right catuse has no defence but in the rule if personal inclination and interest, the principle expressed by "Where I love, there 1 hold.'

407 ff This is a charge against those who hold office in the Church of deliberately throwing temptation in the way of their people, in order to profit by the fines which may be imposed for breaches of moralsty and duscipline. The meaning is fully illustrated by parallel passages in the Mirour de Comme, 20161 ff., and the Vox Chimanter, lil. 1 yp; cp. Chaucer, Pors. Tide, 72I. The sentence here is a little cisorderly and therefore obscure: 'Men say that they drive forth thear fook from the smooth meadow into the briars, because they wish to seme and by such ill-treatment take away the wool which shall remain upon the thorns, torn out by the briars,' &c. The archdeacon's court is chiefly referred to.
416. chalk for chese, cp. ii. 2346: it is a proverbial expression still current.
430. 'We see the lot drawn amiss': for 'merel' cp. Mir. 23496.
434. Hebr. v. 4.
452. in audience, 'in public assembly' : cp. ii. 2556.
454. a chirie feire, taken as an emblem of delights which are transitory : cp. vi. 890 f.,

> 'And that endureth bot a throwe, Riht as it were a cherie feste.'
460. understode, past subj. with indefinite sense: cp. i. 383, ii. 88, iii. 97 I , iv. 2597, 2728, vi. 1474. 'Whoso understood their words, to him it seems likely,' &c., instead of 'to him it would seem likely'; cp. 1.520.
461. The distinction between 'thinke' and 'thenke' is completely lost in Gower's usage : 'thenke' is the regular form for both, but 'thinke' is admitted equally for both in rhyme, as $\mathbf{v} .213,254$.
480. 'For fear that (On the chance that) I may say wrong.' The subject is a delicate one and the author shows similar caution when dealing with it in the Mirour.
492. as of, 'as regards': cp. i. 557, iii. 1479, &c.

Latin Verses. iv. 4. velle, used as a noun, 'will': so 'de puro velle' in the lines at the beginning of the second book.

509 f. 'Which with great difficulty man shall restrain, if he shall restrain it ever.'
521. For the position of 'and' see note on 155.
525. stonde upon: cp. 214.
529. som men : 'som' is uninflected in this expression: on the other hand we have 'somme clerkes,' l. 355.
546. the man, so 582 : see note on 72.

550 f . 'If any one thinks otherwise, look at the people of Israel': ' Behold' is 2nd sing. imperative. The unusual form 'Irael' is given by the best MSS. here and elsewhere, and we must suppose that it proceeds from the author.
558. stonde full : perhaps a reference to 503 ff ., or a metaphor from the tides.

567 (margin). The quotation is from Cons. Phil. ii. Pr. 4: 'Quam multis amaritudinibus humanae felicitatis dulcedo respersa est.' The constant references to Fortune and her wheel may probably be suggested by Boethius, e. g. ii. Pr. 1.
578. i. e. till the end of all things.

585 ff . This vision of Nebuchadnezzar, which our author takes as his guide to universal history, is made the subject of illustration in those MSS. which have miniatures at or near the beginning of the Confessio Amantis.
618. Fel doun: cp. iii. 2492, 'That have I herd the gospell seith.'
668. hol : see note on 683.
676. 'And he kept himself in this condition undisturbed,' the subject being supplied from 1. 671, 'Was in that kinges time tho.' For omission of pronoun cp. Prol. 348, i. 1895, 2083, 2462, &c. However, the fall of the Empire took place not in the reign of Nebuchadnezzar but of Belshazzar (see 1. 685).
683. Here and in 693 the best MSS. have 'put' for 'putte,' and this entire suppression of the inflexional syllable in cases where it is lost to the metre by elision is sufficiently well-attested to justify us in accepting it as an occasional practice of the author, both in the case of verbs and adjectives; cp. $668,739, & c$. It is especially common with this particular verb, e.g. i. $1578,1807,3213$, ii. 93, 1021, &c., where 'put' is used for infinitive as well as for the preterite. Much more rarely in cases where there is no elision, as i. 732. On the other hand, we have 'putte' pret. before an elision, l. 1069, i. 2797, 'pute' inf. i. 462, iv. 164 I.
702. In the marginal summary here $F$ gives 'Imparatoris,' and sometimes in other places where the word is fully written, as i. 1417, ii. 593, 2506, 3201. However, 'Imperator' is also found in various places of the same MS., as vii. 2416, and the contracted form 'Impator' has in this edition been written out so.
725. Of that honour which tok, i. e. ' of such honour that he took.'
738. so vileins: a clear case of French plural of the adjective, used here for the sake of the rhyme.
739. fals: see notes on 221, 683.

745 ff . It is hardly necessary to point out that our author's history is here incorrect. Charlemagne was not called in against the Emperor Leo, who died in the year before he was born, but against the Lombards by Adrian I, and then against the rebellious citizens of Rome by Leo III, on which latter occasion he received the imperial crown.
756. Of Rome and: cp. 11. 759, 766, and note on 155.
761. doth restore, i. e. 'causeth to be restored.'

772 ff . Here again the story is historically inaccurate, but it is not worth while to set it straight.

786 ff. The meaning seems to be, ' But this after all is what we might expect, for prosperity (they say) seldom endures.'
795. hath no felawe, 'hath no supporter or champion': cp. Praise of Peace, 266, 'And in this wise hath charite no brother.'
809. The punctuation follows F .
823. expondeth. This form occurs also in $11.663,873$, as a reading of $F$. The French terminations '-on,' '-oun,' had the same sound and rhymed together, and the same is true of '-ance,' '-aunce.' Probably on the same principle therefore ' expondeth' may stand for 'expoundeth,' and rhyme with 'foundeth': cp. viii. 235 f. On the other hand, in i. 2867 we have expounde, founde. It may be noted that 'exponde' is the form used in the French works, e.g. Mir. 22192, Trait. xi. 20, where it rhymes with Rosemonde, responde, immonde. As a rule in the Mirour this class of words is given without ' $u$,' but in one stanza we have ' responde,' 'monde,' 'blounde' in rhyme together, 8681 ff.
836. Cit : this is the true reading; the word occurs also Mir. 7197.
843. now with that beform, 'the present with the past,' 'now' being used as a substantive.
850. the sothe seie: this is the reading of the third recension; the others have 'the soth schal seie.' Either text is admissible, for 'soth' is used as a substantive, but 'the sothe' is usually preferred, as in 1. 834, and i. 981, iii. 765.
858. Cp. ii. 3490.
881. writ: syncopated present, 'writeth.' The reference is to 1 Cor. x. 11 .
891. Statue: a dissyllable in Gower and Chaucer (equivalent to 'statwe'), and here reduced to one syllable by elision : cp. Cant. Tales, A. 975. The longer form 'stature' occurs vi. 1524.
900. these clerkes : demonstrative for definite article, as in French; cp. i. 608, and see note on Mir. 30I.
905. See 1. 965. Perhaps here 'cause of' means 'because of,' as 'whos eause' for 'because of which' 1040 ; but I suspect rather an inversion of order, for ' Man is cause of al this wo.'
907. that in tokne, cp. 122.

910 ff . This matter of the corruption of all creation through man's fall is discussed at length both in the Mirour, 26605 ff ., and in the Vox Clamantis, vii. 509ff.

945 ff . This is one of Gower's favourite citations : it occurs also Mir. 26869, Vox Clam. vii. 639. It is quoted here from Moralia, vi. 16 (Migne, Patr. vol. 75, p. 740) : 'Homo itaque, quia habet commune esse cum lapidibus, vivere cum arboribus, sentire cum animalibus, discernere cum angelis, recte nomine universitatis exprimitur.' In the Mirour it is given as from the Homilies; see Hom. in Ev. xxix. 2. The passage is also quoted in the Roman de la Rose, 19246 ff. (ed. Méon), > ' Il a son estre avec les pierres, Et vit avec les herbes drues, Et sent avec les bestes mues,' &c.

947. the lasse world, i.e. a microcosm : cp. Vox Clawe. vii. 645, 'Sic minor est mundus homo, qui fert singula solus.'
The saying is attributed to Aristotle in Mirour, 26929.
953. That is, the stones have existence and so hath he, this being the only point in common.
955. as telleth the clergic, 'as learning informs us.'
975. The which, resumed by ' He ' in 978 : for, i.e. ' since.'
979. That is, the opposite elements in his constitution ('complexioun') are so much at variance with one another.

A/ter 1088 the Sidney Coll, MS. (1) has the following lines,
> 'So were it gode at pis tide pat eueri man ypon his side besowt and preied for pe pes wiche is pe cause of al encres of worschep and of werldis welpe of herths rest of soute helpe withouten pes stant no ping gode forthi to crist wiche sched his blode for pes beseketh alle men Amen amen amen amen.'

These were printed by Caxton, and afler him by lerthelet, with some slight variatons of spelling, and the reading 'and soules helthe 'for 'of soule helpe.' No other MS. contuns them, so far as I know, except Hatton 51, which is copred from Caxton's edtion. If we read ' So wete it good as at pis tide,' and correct the spelling throughout, the lines will be such as Goucr mught have written, and I rather suspect that they may have been contamed in the Statiord MS. (S), to which $\Delta$ is near'y atted. S has lost a leaf here, on which ample room for them could have been found, the number of lines missing being onfy 156 , while the number for a full leaf is 184 . The authonty of $S$ would be cunclusive in their favour.

LIB. 1.

After setting forth in the Prologue the evils of the existing state of society and tracing them for the most part to lack of love and concord between man and man, the author now deliberately renounces the task of setung right the balance of the woild, an undertaking which he has not shrunk from in former years, but recognizes now as too great for his strength. He proposes to change the style of his writuggs and to deal with something which all may understand, with that emotion of love which Nature has implanted both in man and beast, which no one is able to keep within ruie or measure, and uhich seems to be under the dominion of blind chance, like the gifts of furtune.

The explanation suggested in the New Engl. Dict. that 'conscience' stands for 'conscientiousness ' or 'rightful dealing,' will hardly do, and the word does not seem to be used early in this sense.

636. devolte apparantic: the words are pure Frenck, and the French feminine form is as naturally used for the adjective, as in the 'seinte apparantie' of Mir. 1124. We cannot apply the English rule of the definite adjective to such combinations as this: cp: note on Prol. 221. However, 'devoute' in L. 669 seems to be the plural form.

957. sche miry ther meght, she hath no power in the matter': cp. 725, 'there I lye noght.'
1006. Citeatne. Gower uses several of these femimine forms of substantives. Desides 'ettezeme' we have consine, it. 1201, caputime, v. 1972, enemue, v. 6753 , anemie, vin. 1353 (all of which also occur in the Mirour), and occassonally adjectives, as 'veme' 'glorel, i. $267 \%$ ff, (vertu) 'savereme,'si. 3507, 'scinte' (ihathe), iv, g64, 'soleme,' v. 19, 1 , and probably 'divine,' 31. 3243 , 'gentule,' visi. 2294 .

1051. hut, pres, tense, 'putteth.'
1067. menable, "fit to guide,' the ship; cp. it. 1123, 'A wynd menable fro the londe.' The word occurs seseral times in oar author's French, as Mirour, 3676, 11882, 17392. The meaning in English is not always the same, the word being, like others of this form, sometimes active and sometimes passive: cp. 'deccivable' (11, 1698, 2202). Here and in the passage quoted the meanugg is 'leading,' fit to gutice': elsewhere it stands for 'easity led,' 'apt to be guded,' as in ini. 390 and the French examples.
1068. 'tobreken' is the rending of $J H_{1} X C L, S B A, W$, and is evidently requred by the sense.

1077 ff. Here Gouer mainly follows Benoit de Sainte-More (Roman di Trove, 25620 ff .), but he was of course acquainted a so with Guido (Hfistoria Trotana, lib. 27: m 5, ed. Argent. 1494). The name Eprus is from Benoit, for Coudo has 'Apus': on the other hand, Gundo and not Benoit describes the horse as made of brass. In speaking of the discussion about pulling down a portion of the walls, and of the walls themselves as buitt by Neptune, 1146, 1153 ff ., our author is certainly drawing from Benoit. Some poats of the story and many detauls are original.

Gower does not say that men were contanned wthin, though this is stated by his atethonties, of whom Benoit places Sinon inside the horse, whale Guido finds room there for a thousand armed men. The 'tweive' wheels seem to be dae to Gower, as also the picturesque touch, 'And goth gistrende ayem the Sunne.

1172. Synon. The reading of $F$ may be right, for 'Smon' is the form of the name given in many copies of Guido. Here however the whole of the second recension and the better copies of the first give 'Synon,' and a copyist's alteration would be towards the more famitar name.

$1400^{\circ} \mathrm{ff}$. The 'Tale of Fiorent' is essentially the same as Chaucer's - Wife of Bath's Tale,' but the details are in many ways different. According to Chaucer the hero of the adventure is a knight of Arthur's court and the occasion of his trouble a much less creditable one than in the case of Florent. In Chaucer's tale the knight sees a fairy dan.e of ladies in the forest before be meets his repulsive deliverer, and she gets from him a promise that he will grant her next request if it lies in his power, the demand of marrage beng put off untulafter the quest.on has been successfully solved by her assistance. The rather unseasomalle lectures on gentilesse, poverty, and old age are not introduced by Gower. On the other hand, Chaucer's alternatise, 'W'ml you hase me oid and ugly but a fathful wife, or young and far with the attendant risks?' is more pomted and satisfactory than the corresponding feature m Gower's tale. Finally, Chaucer has nothing about the enchantment by which the lady had been transformed.

It is tolerably certain that neither borrowed the stury from the other, though there are a few touches of minute resemblance whoth may suggest that one was acquanted with the other's rendering of It : sce 11, 1587, 1727.

We cannot point to the precise original of elther ; but a very sumblar story is found in The Weddynge of Str Gazicne and Dame Rognew, published in the collection of poems relating to Gawain ed.ted by Str F. Madden (Bannaty ne Club, 1839) and contained in MS. Rawlinson C. 86. In this ballad Arthur's life is spared by a strange kmght who meets him unarmed in the forest, on condition of answenng his question. 'What do women love best,' at the end of twelve months. He is assisted by Dame Ragnell, who demands in return to be married to Sir Gawain. Sir Gawain accepts the proposal from loyalty to his lord, and the rest is much as in Gower's version. It should be noted that the alternative of day or night appears in the ballad and was a feature of the original story, which Chaucer altered.

The Percy fragment of The Marriage of Sir Gawain, also printed in Sir F. Madden's volume, is the same story as we have in the other ballad. The name Florent and that of the Emperor Claudius are probably due to Gower, who is apt to attach to his stories names of his own choosing: cp. Lucius and Dionys (Conf. Am. v. 7124*, Mir. 7101), Spertachus for Cyrus (vii. 3418), &c.

2355 ff. This applicaton of the story, founded on the fact that the narcissus blooms in early spring, seems to be due to our author : cp. if. 196, 1ii. 1717.
2377. a place, equivalent to 'aplace,' which we find in 1.1888 , i. e. 'on place,' 'into place.' We might read 'aplace' here also, for though the words were at first written separately in $F$, there seems to lave been an intention of joming them afterwards. However, such separations are often found elsewhere, as 'a doun,' iv. 2710, v. 385 ; ' a ferr,' i. 2335; 'a game,' vili. 23!9; and most MSS. have 'a place' here.
2398. The reading of F , 'Which elles scholde haue his wille,' is a possible one, but the preservation of final ' $e$ ' before 'have' used unemphatically, as bere, would be rather unusual. Instances such as I. 2465 , 'a werre hadde, are not to the point, and in 1.2542 , h here there is a better example, 'Of such werk as it scholde have,' the word 'have' is made more emphatic by standing in rhyme.

Latin l'rses. ix. 2. cilens. Such forms of spelling are not uncommon in Cower's Latin: cp. 'cenatore,' v. 4944 (margin).
2410. zynd. The curious corruption 'hunt,' which appears in one formor another in all the copies of the unrevised first recension, must have been one of the mistakes of the erigimal copyist. The critical note here should be, 'huntel HyY ... C hante L haunt $\mathrm{B}_{2}$, and the actual reading in $L$ is, "Hap pilke errour hante in bis office,' which seems due to a marginal note having been incorporated in the text.

CONFESSIO AMANTIS

2411. Which, for 'that' in consecutive sense, answering to 'thilhe see note on l. 492. In this case it does not even stand as the subject off the verb, for we have 'he overthroweth.'
2412. fok. This is second person singular, and we might rather expect 'toke,' which in fact is the readng of some good copies : cy. 2 . 234, iii. 2629, vini. 2076.
2413. daunger. See note on Bahdes, xif. 8. The name represents the iniluences which are unfavourable to the lover's suit, and cherfy the feelings in the lady's own mind wheh tend towards prodence or prompt her to disdain The personification in the Roman de fo R.se is uell known. There Danger is the chief guardian of the rose-bush, and has for his helpers Malebouche, who spreads unfavourable reports of the lover, with Honte and Paour, who represent the feelings in the lady's mind which lead her to resist his advances : see Roment de it Danger, however, also stands without personification for scornfuinets or reluctance in love, and so the adjectuve 'dangereus' Roms. de la Aiose. 479 (Eng. 'dangerous,' Cunt. Tales, D 10go, 'Is every knight of bis in dangerous?').

In the Confesso Amantis the principal passages relating to Danget as a person are iin. r 537 ff . and $v .6613 \mathrm{f}$. Such expressinns aiso frequently occur as 'hire daunger,' iv. 2813 ; 'thi Daunger,' iv. 3589 : 'make daunger,' i'. 1110; 'withoute danger,' iv, 1149: cp. Chaucer, Tred/. . il. 384 .

For the references to Danger in Lydgate see Dr. Schick's note om Temple of cilas, 156 (E.E.T.S.).
2459 ff. The story of Alboin and Rosemund is related by Jaulus Draconus, Gest. Langoh. ii, 28 , and after him by many others. This historian declares that he has himself seen the cup made of a shuli from which the queen was invited to drak. Accordng to him, Helmo chis, the king's foster-brother and shteld-bearer, plotted with Rosemunds against the king and induced her to gain the support of one Perectus by the device of substituting berself for her watung-maid. Is some versions of the story this Peredeus was omutted. For example, in the Pantheon of Codfrey of Viterbo (xvu), where the story is related first in prose and then in verse, he is only sl ghtly mentioned in the prose account and not at all in the verse, Helmegrs being substatuted for him in both as the object of the queen's artifice. It seems probable that Gower followed this author, with whose book we know he was atquannted (viii. 271). The name of the waiting-maid, Glodessde, seems to have been supplied by our author, who took it no doubt from 'Glodosinda,' the name of Alboin's former wife. Helmege the king's " boteler" is the 'Helmeg's pincerna regis' of the Pun/hicon, and some expressions correspond closely, as 2474 (margin), 'ciphum ex ea gemmis et auro circumlrgaturn...fabricari constituit,' with the line 'Arte scy phum fieri statuens auroque ligari.'

The tale is well told by Gower, but he alters the final catistrophe, so as not to lengthen the story unnecessarily and divert attention from his principal object, whech has to do wath Alboin's punishment for boastung and not with the fate of the adulterous pair. He is responsible for most of the detals: in the Puntheon the story occupies only sixty lines of Latin verse and is rather meagre in style. Compare, for example, the following with the account given by Gower of the holding of the banquet, the crue! boast of Alboin, and the feelings of the queen (2495-2569),

- Ipse caput soceri, quem fecerat ense necari, Arte scyphum fieri statuens auroque ligari,

Vina sure sponsac praccipit inde dari.
Femina nescisset guod testa paterna fuisset,
Vima nec hausisset, nisi diceret impius ipse,
"Testa tui patris est, cum patre, nata, bibe."
Dum bibit immunda data vina gemens Rosmunda, Pectora pessumdat, lacrymae vehementer inundant, Occisique patris res fit amara satıs.'

2485 (margin). Bibe cum putre tus: these are the exact words of the prose account in the Pantheon.
2504. There is a stop after ' ordeine' in $F$, therefore 'sende' should be taken as a past tense rather than as infintive dependent on ' let.'
2533. 'And teok a pride withn his heart.'
2548. The punctuation is that of the MSS.
2569. hud mad. The use of 'had 'for 'hadde' in a position like this, where it is followed by a consonant (or of 'hadde' With the value of a monosyllable in such a position), is most unusual in Cower's verse. If there were a little more authority for it, we night read 'hath,' as given by J: cp. iv. 170, where many of the best copics read 'Had mad' for 'Hath mad.' It is possible that the author meant here ' hath had mad ' ('had' berng past participle), but I cannot quote any clear example of this form of speech at so early a date.

2642 ff . Here Gower departs from the authorities and winds up the story abruptly. According to the original story, Longinus the prefect of Ravenna conspired with Rosemunda to poison Helmichis; and he, having received drink from her hand and feeling himself poisoned, compelled her to drink also of the same cup.
2677. vecine glowre. The adjective here adopts the French feminine from, as we have it in this very combination in the Virour, e.g. 1. 1219. On the other hand, where the words are separated, as l .2720 , the unuoflected form is used. Sce note on 1,1006 .

Latin l'erses, x 5. strigilure forwellum, 'to curry favel.'
2684. 'Heaven seems no gain to him.' The forms 'pinken' and 'fenken' are identified by Gower under 'fenken'; but 'pinke' is sometimes used in rhyme, and indifferently for either, e g. v. 213, 254. 2701. zwavised, adv., 'in a foolsh fashion.'

2951. He let it passe &c.. The preceding sentence is broken niti. and a new one begins which takes no account of the negative. see note on i. 98. This seems better than to make ' it' refer to his prade. for 'mynde' can hardly mean anything here but mentory.

The tale of the Three Questions is one of which I cannol trace the origin, notwithstanding the details of name and place which are given at the end, viz that the king was of Spant and was called Alphonso, that the knight's name was Pedro and his daughter's Petronilla. A reference to the second and third questions occurs in the Mivour de Comme, l260! fi.
3153. herd you seid: so v. 1623,7609 , 'herd me told.' This form of expression, for 'herd you seie,' 'herd me telle,' may have sprung from such a use of the particople as we have in v. 3376 , 'Sche hadde hers' spoke of his name': cp. the use of participle for infinitive wath ' $\mathrm{do}^{\prime}$ ' in in. 1799 and Chaucer, Cuntr. 7 ciles, A 1913, 'Hath Theseus doon wroght,' E 1098, 'Hath doon yow kept.'

3296. leste: elscuhere 'lest'; cp. 3106, 331 3. Here we have 'leste' A, F, 'lest.' JC, B. The form 'moste ' is undloubtedly used for ' most ' (adv) i. 307.
3308. reprise, 'trouble,' as we have 'pane et reprise' in Mirour, 3968.

3365 f . lefc That I ne scholide be: cp. iv 454. In both cases 'lete' is the past participle of 'leten' (hêtan), and not from 'letten,' meaning 'hinder.' In these expressions 'lete' means 'left' in the sense of 'omitted' (hke 'lete or wrong to don,' wi. 2726), and in this usage is naturally followed by a negative: cp. v. 4455 , 'I wol noght lete, W hat so befalle of mo beyete, That I ne schal hire yive and lene.' The same phrase occurs wth the past participle 'let' (meaning 'handered') on it. 128 , and the sense is nearly the same.
3369 ff . Several corrections have been made by the author in this passage, euther to make the verse run more smoothly, as 33 fy ' 3 m mot bea holde' for 'mot nede be holde,' 3374 'mad a Pier' for 'an Erl hier,' 34 ra 'vice be recensed' for 'rsce schal be received,' or to improve the sense and expression, as 3381 'made' for 'place,' 3396 'uyse Peronelle' for 'name Peronelle,' 3414 'worth, and no reprise' for 'worthy, and ne prise,' 3416 'If eny thing stond in contrame' for 'And it is alway debonarre,' an awkward parenthests. It should be noted that A (the Wollaton copy of the second recension) here goes with the unrevised first recension, whereas $B$ agrees with the revised form, except in 11. $3369,3381$.

CONFESSIO AMANTIS

The idea is that Envy, like Mount Etna, bums within itself continually, but is never consumed: cp. Ovid, ITef, xill, 867 (in the tale whinh follows below of Acis and Galalea), > 'Uror enim, laesusque exaestuat acrius ignis, Cumque suis videor translatam virbas Aetnam Pectore ferre meo.'

83. Write in Cizitle. 'Civile' is certainly the Civil Law, for so we find it in Mirour, 15217 , I6092, &c., and also personified in Piers Plorywan. The reference here has puzzled ne rather, but the following, 1 believe, is the explanation of it , strange as it may seem at first sight.
In the Institutions of Justinjan, i. 7, 'De lege Furia Canima sublats, we read that this law, which restricted the power of owners of slaves to manumit them by will, was repealed 'quast hbertatibus impedientem et quodammodo insidant.' It seems that medieval commentators upon this, reading 'canina' for Caninia in the tutle of the Law, explanned the supposed eputhet by reference to the adjective 'invidam' used in the descrption of it, and conceived the law to have been called 'canma' because it compelled men to imitate the dog in the manger by withholding liberty from those for whom they no longer had any use as slaves. In Bromyard's Summa Predicantium we find the following under the head of 'Invidia': 'Omnes isti sunt de professione lee's Fusie canine. Ille enim Fusius inventor fuit legrs cuius exemplum seu casus est iste. Quidam habet fontem quo non potest proprium ortum irrigare . . . posset tamen alteri valere sine illius nocumento ; ipse tamen impedt se alterı prosit quod sibı prodesse non potest, ad modum canis, sicut predictutn est : a cuius condicione lex canina vocata est inter leges duodecim tabularum, que quia iniqua fut, in alsis legibus correcta est, sicut patet Institut. hb. i. de lege Fusia canina tollenda.'

It seems likely then that Gower took the fable from some comment on this passage of the Institutions.

104 ff . From Ovid, Met. xiii. 750 ff ., where it is told at greater length. The circumstance, however, of Folyphemus runming round Etma and roanng with rage and jealousy before he killed Acis, is added by Gower, possibly from a misunderstanding of 1.872 . It is certaiay an improvement.

291 ff . This story, as Prof. Morley points out, is to be found among the fables of Avian, which were widely known. Gower has amplified it considerably. The fable is as follows:
xxii. ' Iuppiter, ambiguas hominum praediscere mentes, Ad terram Phoebum misit ab arce poli.
Tunc duo diversis poscebant numina votis,
Namque alter cupidus, invidus alter erat ;
His sese medium Titan scrutatus utrumque Obtulit et, " Precibus Iuppiter aecus," ait, "Praestandi facilis; nam quae speraverit unus, Protinus haec alter congeminata feret."
Sed cui longa iecur nequiit satiare cupido, Distulit admotas in sua dona preces, Spem sibi confidens alieno crescere voto, Seque ratus solum munera ferre duo.
Ille ubi captantem socium sua praemia vidit, Supplicium proprii corporis optat ovans;
Nam petit extincto iam lumine degat ut uno, Alter ut hoc duplicans vivat utroque carens.

399 f . The meaning of 'heraldie' is rather uncertain here. Probably it stands for ' office of herald,' and the passage means, 'Holding the place of herald in the court of liars'; but the New Engl. Dict. apparently takes it in the sense of 'livery,' comparing the French 'heraudie,' a cassock, and an eighteenth-century example in English. In this case we must understand the lines to mean 'wearing the livery of those who lie,' that is, being in their service.

$5 \times 7 \mathrm{ff}$. The tale of Constance is Chaucer's Man of Lawer's Tisle, and the story was derived by the two authors from the same source, Nitchoiss Trivet's Anglo-Niorman chronscle The story as told by him h.ls been pronted for the Chaucer Susciety from MS. Arundel 56. with colation of a Stockhotm copy (Ontithats amd Analugres, 18721. The quotations in these Notes, however, are from the biodlean 115 .. Rawlinson 13. 178 .

Gower has followed the original more closely than Chaucer, hat he dnerges from it in a good many points, as will be seen from the following enumeration:
(1) Gower says nothing of the proficiency of Constance in sciences and languages, on which Trivet lays much stress. (2) Ile abnderes the negotations for marriage with the Souldan (620ff). (3) He dixes not mention the seven hundred Saracens with whm the Souldan'a mother conspired. (4) He brings Constance to land in Northumberland in the summet instead of on Christmas day (732). (i) He ditats the talk between Constance and Hermyngeld whih leads to the conversion of the latter $\{\mathrm{cp} .752 \mathrm{ff} .1$. (6) According to Trivet the bhind man who received his sught was one of the British Christans who had remained after the Saxon conquest, and he went to Wales to bring the bishop Lucuss. (7) The knight who solicited Constance had been left, according to Truvet, in charge during Elda's absence, and planned hus accusation aganst her for fear she should report his behaviour to Elda on his return (cp. $792 \mathrm{ff}$. . (8) The words spuked when the felon knight was smitten are not the same. Gower moreover makes him confess his crime and then die, whereas in the French bouk he is put to death by the kug (cp. 879f.). (9) The reasons for Domilde's hatred of Constance are omitted by Gower. (10) Trwet says that Domulde gave the messenger a drugged potion on each occasion (cp. Q52 ff, 1008 ff .). (11) The communication to Constance of the supposed letter from the king, and her acceptance of her fate, are omitted by Gower. (12) The prayers of Constance for herself and her chid upon the sea and her nursing of the chatd are additions made by Gower (1055-10\$3), \{13, According to Trivet, Constance landed at the heathen admiral's castle and was entertamed there, going back to her ship for the night. Then in the night Thitlous came to her, and professing to repent of having denied his faith, prayed that he might go with her and return to a Christian country. So they put out at sea, and he, moved by the devil, tempted her to sin. She persuaded him to look out for land, with a promse of yielding to his desires on reaching the shore, and while he is intent on this occupation, she pushes him overlboard (cp. 1084 1125). (14) The vengeance of king Alte on his mother is telated by Trivet immediately after this, by Gower later. According to Trivet he hen ed her to pleces (cp, 1226-1 301). In the ballad of Emart the mother is condemned to be burnt, but her sentence is changed to exile. (I5) Gower omits the entry of king Alte into Rome and the incident of his being seen by Constance as he passed through the streets. (16) Tnvet says that when Monce took the message to the Emperor, the latter was struck by his resemblame to his lost daughter. (17) Gower adds the incident of Constance riding forward to meet her father ( 1500 ff.). (I8) According to Trivet, Constance returned to Rome because of the illness of her father ( cp . 15 Boff.).
These differences, besijes others of detail, show that Gower treated the story with some degree of freedom.

Before Trivet was known as the common source for Chaucer and Gower, Tyrrwhitt suggested that Chaucer's tale was taken from Gower. Chaucer in fact crucizes and rejects one feature of the tale which occurs in Gower's version of it, namely the sending of 'the chuld Maurice' to invite the Emperor. This incident however comes from Trivet, and it is probably to him that Chaucer refers.

It has been argued howeser in recent times from certain munte resemblances in detall and forms of expresson betucen Chaucer's tale and Gower's, that Chaucer was acyuanted with Gower's rendering of the story as well as with Triset's (F.. Lucke in Anglaa, vol. xiv); and the same lone of reasoming has been employed by others, e.g. Dr. Skeat in his edition of Chaucer, to prove that Gower borrowed to some extent from Chaucer. It seems probable that Chaucer's tale of Constance was written earlier than Gower's, and it is l.kely enough that Gouer was acquanted with his friend's work and may have conveyed some expressions from it into his oun. Lucke adrluces twenty-seven instances, more than had of them trivial or unconvincing, but amounting on the whole to a tolerably strong proof that one of the two poets was acquainted with the other's story. The most

'She hat hure chambre abiding Cristes wille. The tyme is come' B 72 If . These resemblances of phrase are such as we might expect to find if Gower had read Chaucer's story before urthrs his own. In all essentials he is independent, and it is surely not necessary to suppose, as Dr. Skeat dues, that a quarre! between them was caused by such a matter as this.

He selected Maurse of Cappadocia to succeed hum, and gave him his daugher in marrage, The romance related by Trivet seens to hate no histonsit foundation, but it was durng the reign of Maurice that the misston went from Rome for the conversion of the C.nglish, and this may have had something to do with the story that Maurice himself was partly of English origin. Trivet himself mentions the historical form of the story, but pretends that he finds a different account in the whl Saxon clronicles, 'les aunciens croniques des Sessouns,' or 'l'estoire de Sessons.'

785. As he that. The reference is to the king, so that we should. rather expect 'As him that,' but the phrase is a stereotyped one and does not always vary in accordance with grammatical construction: cp. 1623. We find however also 'As him which,' iii. 1276.
791. 'The time being appointed moreover': an absolute use of the participle.
831. 'trencha la gowle Hermigild': therefore the fact that Gower and Chaucer agree in saying that he cut her throat has no special significance.
833. The reading ' that dier,' or ' that diere,' was apparently a mistake of the original copyist. It appears in all the unrevised copies of the first recension and also in B. $\Lambda$ however has the corrected reading.
857. After, 'In accordance with.'

880 ff. Here Chaucer follows the original more closely than Gower, as also just above, 'him smoot upon the nekke boon.' The words of the miraculous voice are given in Latin by Trivet, 'Aduersus filiam matris ecclesie ponebas scandalum: hoc fecisti et tacui ' ('et non tacui' Rawl. Stockh.). Chaucer has (B 674 ff.),

> 'And seyde, "Thou hast desclaundred gilteles The doughter of holy chirche in heigh presence: Thus hastou doon and yet holde I my pees."
895. This line occurs several times, e.g. i. 2106, ii. 2670.
905. Lucie, apparently to be pronounced 'Lucle.' Such names usually appear either in the Latin forms 'Lucius,' 'Tiberius,' 'Claudius,' 'Virginius,' or with accent on the antepenultimate syllable 'Tibérie,' 'Mercúrie,' the ' i ' not being counted as a syllable.
947. What the right name really is we can hardly say for certain. The printed text of the French gives 'Domulde' or 'Domilde,' the Rawlinson MS. has ' Downilde,' and Chaucer makes it 'Donegild.'

1433 f. Gower's more usual form wolld be, 'Desircth not the heaven so much, that he ne longeth more,' as i. 718, &c.

1464 ff . The connexion of this remark is clearer in the original story, which says that Constance told her husband, of the Emperor should refuse his prayer, to ask 'pur l'amur q'il atoit al alme sa fille Constaunce'; because she knew that he den.ed no one uho prayed in this form.

1586 ff. after that, 'according as' : cp. Prol. 544, iii. 1074. The book says in fact with much apparent accuracy that Alla dred mine months after hus return, that Constance returned to Rome half a year after, 'pur la novele qe ele oit de la malddie son pere,' that on the thirteenth day after her arrinal the Emperor died in the arms of his daughter, and she fullowed hom in a year, the date being St. Clement's day of the year 585 . It is further stated that Elda, who had accompanied Constance to Rome, died at Tours on his way back to Enyland.
1549. the wel merthge of loze. In spite of the variations there can hardly the a doubt about the true reading here The word is clearly 'meninge' both in F and 5, and the change to 'whel' was suggested no doubt by the misreading 'mesinge.' For the expression cp. ill. 599, 'To love and to his welwillinge.'

1613 ff. Gower apparent.y pieced together this story of Demetrus and Perseus from several sources, for it does not seem to occur in any sing.e authority precisely as he gives th . The first part, which has to do with the false accusation brought aganst Demetrus and its consequences, agrees wath the account gaven in Jastin, Efifome, hb. xxxil. The story of the daughter of Paulus Emblus and her little dog is told by Valerius Maximus, IIem. 1. 5. 3. Finally, the detads of the defeat of Persens seem to be taken from the account of a catastrophe uhach about the same time befell the Basternae, a Thracian tribue ailied with Perseus, who according to Orosius (iv, 20), when crossing the Danube in winter with large numbers of men and horses, were almost annifnated by the breakong of the ice. Tle same author mentions that after the defeat and capture of Persets his son exercised the craft of a brass-worker at Rome.

It is possible of course that Gower had before him some single account in which these elements were already combined. In Vimeent of Beasvals, Specwhum Hfst, t. 6 f f, we find first the catastrophe of the Basternae, taken from Orosius, then the Macedoman war from Justun and Otosiss, with the incident of the deg inserted from Valetius.

It remains to be asked where Gower found the story of the speaking. trumpet by means of which Celestan was moved to hus abdication, why he stupposed that the capture of Bonface took place near Avignon, and whence came such additomal details as we have on $\mathrm{I}_{3} 3028$.
As to the first, it was certanly a current story, because we find it repeated by later wruters, as Paulus Langius, Chron. Cïnz., ann. 1294, ' Per fistulam etram frequentus noctu in cubili per patsetem missam, selut coelica vox esset, loquebatur ei : "Celestine, Celesune, renuncia papatui, quia alter saluari non poteris, dam vires tuas excedre." The quotation of it in the margin of $F$ is in a different hand from that of the text and of the heading 'Nota de prophecia' &c. The omission of the Latin altogether in some manuscripts, as AdT, W, has no special s.gntificance for this passage.

NOTES. Lib. II. 3122 -III. 292

(Note that the name 'Canace' is used by Gower so as to thyme with 'place.')

In spite of the character of the subject, it must be allowed that Gower tells the story in a very touching manner, and he shows gond taste in nmitting some of Ovid's details, as for example those in Ep. 39-44. The appeal of Canace to her father as given by Gower is orginal, and so for the most part is the letter to her brother and the picturesque and pathetic scene of her death. On the uhole this must be regarded as a case in which our author has greatly improved upon his authorty. Lydgate obvinusly has Gouer's story before him when he introduces the tale (quite needlessly) into his Fall of Princes. It may be noted that in Ovid also the catastrophe is given as a consequence of ungoverned anger :
' Jmperat, heu! ventis, tumidae non imperat irae.'
172. Inzue positif: see note on Prol. 247. Gower's view is that there is nothing naturally immotal about an incestuous marriage, but that it is made wrong by the 'lex positiva' of the Church. This position he makes clear at the beginning of the eighth book, by showing that in the first ages of the world such marrages must have heen sanctioned by dis ine authority, and that the idea of kinship as a bar to marriage had grown up gradually, cousins being allowed to marry among the Jews, though brother and sister might not, and that finally the Church had ordered,

> 'That non schal wedden of his ken Ne the seconde ne the thndde.' viii. 147 f.

If attacked by Chaucer with regard to the subject of this story, he would no doubt defend humself by arguing that the wice with which it deale was not against nature, and that the erring brother and sister were in truth far more deserving of sympathy than the father who took such cruel vengeance. Notw thstanding his general strictness in matters of moralaty, Gower was something of a fatalist, cp . the recurring phrases of $1222,1348,1677$, iv. 1524, , sc., and he repeatedly emphasizes the irresistible character of the impulses nf nature in love ; cp 1. 17 ff., 1051 f., 262 f , vi. 126 ff , and here l. 161 (margin), ${ }^{\text {intollera- }}$ bilem jubentutis concupiscenciam.'

The point of this as it occurs in Ovid depends upon the fact that her child has already been exposed and, as she conceives, torn by wild beasts, and she entreats het brother if possible to collect his remains and lay them by her,-a very natural and pathetic request. Gower has chosen for the sake of picturesque effect in this 361 ff . This is from Orid, Me\%, uli. 324 f. Gower bas chasen to mind the sequel of the story, which was that after seven years Titesids ian the same smikes again, and by strikung them a second tume recovered his former sex. This bemg so, he is obliged to make a separate st is ( 736 ff ) of the dispute between Jupiter and Jumo, which gave Cid occasion for mentioning the incident of the snakes.

515. balketh. A 'balk' is a ridge left unploughed, and 'to balk' 113 ploughing is to leave a ridge either between two furrows or in the furrow itself, the plough being permitted to pass over a prece of ground without breahing it. Here it is referred to as an accident arismg eather from not ploughing stranght or not keeping the ploughshare regularly at the proper depth. From this idea of leaving out something come most of the other meanings of the verb: see Nitu Engl. Dit.
544. Hire oghte noght be. For this impersonal use with the simple infinitive cp. 704.
545. For $I$, i. e. 'For that I' : cp. 820, &c.
585. This expression, which Pauli for some reason calls an 'obscene proverb,' seems to be nearly equivalent to the saying about the bird that fouls his own nest (cp. Mirour, 23413), and refers apparently to recriminations between the owl and the stock upon which he sits, on the matter of cleanliness. The application is to the case of the man who quarrels with his own performances, and naturally has the worst of it himself.
626. 'World' seems to be the true reading here, though 'word' stood in the earlier form of text. The meaning is 'that state of things shall never be permitted by me.' The use of 'world' is like that which we have in i. 178, where 'mi world' means 'my condition': cp . Prol. 383, 1081. The verb 'asterte' is used in the sense of escaping notice and so being allowed to pass or to happen: cp. i. 1934, 'Bot that ne schal me noght asterte, 'To wene forto be worthi,' &c.
Cp. i. 722.
The expression 'that word schal me nevere asterte' is a more ordinary one (and therefore more likely to have been introduced by a copyist), but it gives no satisfactory sense here.
641 ff. The story was a hackneyed one, and occurs in many places. It is shortly told by Jerome, Adv. Jovin. i. 48.

736. Met. iii. 316 ff . We have here the rest of the story which was referred to above, 361 ff . The point of the incident as told by Ovid is (perhaps purposely) missed by Gower, who does not mention the reason why Tiresias was selected as judge.

973 ff. This story may be found in Benoit's R'oman de Trait, 27551 fi and in Guido, lib. 32 (n $3 \mathrm{v}^{\mathrm{o}}$, ed. Argent.). We must note however that for the classical Nauplus we find in Gower 'Namplus," wheteas in Beno't and Citudo both it is 'Naulus': therefore it would seem that our author had before him also some other form of the story, where he found the name 'Nauplius' or 'Nauplus,' which he read 'Namplus' or 'Namplus.' Perhaps this may have been Hyginus, Fal. crsi, L1stwhere Gower usually follows Benoit rather than Gudo, but here several expressions otcur which seem to be suggested by Gudo's form of the story: see notes on 1030 and 1063 . Also Gower says nothing of the incident of rochs being hurled down on the Greeks (Rom de Trous, 27795 fi.), which is also omitted by Guido.

1065. 'what' for 'war, which appears in the unrevised form of the first recension, must be an error of the orignal scribe : on the other hand, 'tyme' for 'dai' proceeded no doubt originally from the authot and was altered in order to make the verse run more stnoothly.

Latin V'erses, iv. r. et sit sporifus cius Nurbous: a reference to I saiah i1. 22, 'Quiescite ergo ab homine, culus spritus in nartus eius ext. The same passige is quoted in Mirour, 4754, and it is esclent there that the 'breath in the nostrils' was understood by our author to stand for fury of anger.
1113. zat hem weel, 'Jet them beware.'
1158. The contest in the heart between Wit and Renson on the one hand and Will and Hope on the other is quite in the stile of the Romman de la Rase, where Reason and the Lover have an endless controversy $(2983 \mathrm{ff})$. Though the agencies are clearly personified here, the a thor has not assigned capital letters to their names.
1166. owt of retentue, 'out of my service.'
1173. jetiparte, 'discord,' nne side being matched against the other. The first reading was 'champartie,' which may have proceeded from the author. It is clear that this word was used by Lydgate in the sense of 'rivalry' or 'contest' in the phrase 'holde champartie,' and this may either have come from the idea of partnershop, implying division of power and so rivalry, as in Chaucer, Cant. Tales, A 1949, or from the legal sense, with which Gower and Lydgate wou'd doubtless be acquainted, meaning partnership for a contentious purpnse. There seems no sufficient reason for supposing (with the New Engl. Drat.) that Lydgate's use was founded on a misunderstanding of Chaucer.
1183. and th . Caxton and Berthelet both have 'tyl that 'for 'and tal,' and one is tempted to suggest that 'and til ' was meant to stand for ' untul.'

1201 f. The story of the visit of Alexander to Dingenes wiss a common one enough, and it is hardly worth while to investigate its source for Gower. He probably here combined varnous materials into one narrative, for the usual form of the story as given by Vincent of Beauvais, Spec. Hist. ini. 68 f., and in the Gesta Rnnamorum, does not melude the conversation about the Reason and the Will. This may have been derived from Walter Burley, De Vita Phtesophorwis, cap. I., - Dum Alexander rex coram Diogene transiret, Drogenes tanquam ilum sperneus non respexıf ; cui daxit Alexander, "Quid est Diogenes qund me non respicis, quası mei non indigeas?" Cur ille, "Ad qusd necesse habeo servi servorum meorum?" Et Alexander, "NumqLid servorum tuorum servus sum ?" Ait, "Ego prevalco cupidtattibus mems refrenans illas et subuciens mihn llas ut serviant : tibi autem cuphdtates prevalent, et servus earum efficeris, earum obtemperans iussioni : servus igitur es servorum meorum." ' Burley gives the other part of the conversation separately.

The incident of the messenger sent to inquire and of the answer which he brought back is no doubt due to Gower, as also the idea of the 'tun' being set on an axle and adapted for astronomical observations.
1222. 'As fate would have it': see note on 172 (end), and cp. 1442.

1310. su schiffe, 'to dispose of.' In Burley, 'rogo ne auferas quod dare non potes.'

1331 f. The tale of Pyramus and Thisbe is from Ovid, Afet. iv. 55 166. Chaurer has taken it from the same source in the Legend of Grod Women, When we compare the results, we find that in this instance it is Chaucer who has fullowed his authority closely, while Gower gives a paraphrase in his own language and with several vatiations of detail. He says, for example, that the lovers themselves made the hole in the wall through which they conversed; be omuts Ninus' K k tomb; he speahs of a lion, not a honess; he says that This be tiod herself in a bush in it a cavel, and that then the hon slew and deroured a beast before drnking at the spring; he cles short the spetcil of Pyramus befire killing himself, he represents that Py ramus was slam at ance matead of living untul Thisbe came: he invents an entirely new speech for Thasbe; and he juduciously ornts, as Chauker does also, the mention of the muberry-tree and ats transtormation.

In short, Gower writes apparently from a general recollection of the story, while Chaucer evidently has his Ovid befure hm and en teavo irs to tranalate almost every phrase, showing thereby has good taste, fort Oisid tells the story well.

The following points in Olid (among others) are reprodaced by Chatcer and not by Gower : 1. 56, 'quas Oriens habuit' : 5 n, 'Coc: l bus murss'; 59 . 'Notitiam primosque gradus vernal fecit' ' which Chatere Gower's rendering of the story is inferor to that of Chaucer, as might be expected, but nevertheless it is sumple and pathetoc. It bas even some points of superionty, as 1366 f , the passage of Tinsbe through the town at night; 1400 , 'with bis blodt snoute'; 14ll, the terror of Thisbe when concealed in the bush; and mally t 46 fif., where mstead of del.berately resolving on death and mflicting it with calm resnlution, she is more naturally represented as overcome by a sudden impulse in the madst of her mourning and kilang herself almost without consclousness of what she did.

1743. 'And it is to be desired that a man,' &c.

1757 ff. This story is chiefly from Benoit, Roman de Troie; 28025 ff. Guido omits many details which are given by Gower. Note that in 1. 28025 , where Joly's edition has 'Samas,' Guido and Gower both have 'Athemas.' Our author has treated his materials freely and tells the story at greater length. The speech which he assigns to Nestor is for the most part original.

1885 ff . The tale of Orestes is from Benoit de Sainte-More, Rom. de Troie, 27925-27990, 28155-28283, and 28339-28402. Guido omits the visit of Orestes to Athens to obtain help for his expedition, the portion of the oracle which bad him tear away his mother's breasts, and the name of Menetius (or Menesteus), who defended Orestes, and Gower's details are in general more in accordance with those of Benoit. A few exceptions may be found, however. For example, Gower says that Agamemnon was murdered as he lay in bed (1915), Guido, 'dum suo soporatus dormiret in lecto,' but Benoit only, 'L'ont la première nuit ocis.' Again, Guido calls Idomeneus ' consanguineum eius,' and Gower says, 'So as he was of his lignage,' of which Benoit says nothing. No doubt Gower was acquainted with both, and preferred the French because he perceived it to be better.
1911. 'To set her love in place where it cannot be secure.'

2639 ff. The story is taken from Benoit (Rom, de 7 rame, 6.4976590 ), as ue miay see at once from the name 'Theucer,' which Guado gives rather more correctly as 'Theutran.' Also Il. 2674-2680, Roman de Troie, 6545-6553, have nothing corresponding to them in Guido. Guido here certainly referred to a copy of the so-called Dares, where the name occurs in its classical form 'Teuthras.' He is particularly interested in the story on local grounds, being concerned to show that the 'Messe' which he found in Benoft might be connected with the name of his place of residence, Messina, and that the events related occurred actually in Sicily. Accordingly he speaks of certain columns popularly called 'columns of Hercules,' which existed in his own time in Sicily, 'ex parte Barbarorum,' i.e. on the south coast, and takes them as evidence of the connexion of Hercules with the island, and hence of the probability that this story (which in the original has to do with Hercules, though Gower has excluded him from it) had its scene in Sicily. Dares, he admits, says nothing of this, and his reference to Dares is here in more precise form than usual, ' in suo codice' according to the Bodleian MS., though the printed editions give 'in suo opere' (MS. Add. A. 365, f. 50 v').
He says of the place where these columns are, ' qui locus dicitur adhuc columpnarum,' and adds that the emperor Frederic II has established a town there, and that the place is now called 'terra nova.' This is obviously identical with the modern Terranova, founded by Frederic II near the site of the ancient Gela. It seems probable that Guido may have been himself a native of this place or of its immediate neighbourhood, and that he chose to call himself after its former designation, 'Columpna ' or 'Columpnae,' instead of by the new name which had come into use during his own lifetime ${ }^{1}$.
2643. His Sone. This is a mistake on the part of Gower. Both Benoit and Guido state quite clearly that Telephus was the son of Hercules, and that it was to Hercules that the obligation was due which is referred to in 2690 ff . Perhaps the copy of the Roman de Troie which Gower used bad 'Thelefus fu filz Achilles' for 'Thelefus fu filz Hercules,' in l. 6506.
2756. We should rather have expected 'That I ro you wol nothing hele.'

LIB. IV.
9. Cp. Mirour, 5606,
'Lachesce dist, Demein, Demein.'
38. Thou schalt mowe: cp. ii. 1670 , where we have 'mow' for ' mowe.'
60. a fin. This is a French expression, which appears repeatedly in the Mirour as 'au fin.'
77 ff. The only definite indication of sources here is the reference (such as it is) to Ovid, Her. Ep. vii., contained in II. 104-115.
92. as it be scholde, cp. iii. 1348.
${ }^{1}$ On inquiry in the locality I find that Terranova, which has always had a column for its emblem, claims Guido as a native : see Momoric Gelesi by Sign. S. D. Navarra, Terranova 1896, pp. 72 f.

CONFESSIO AMANTIS

104 fi . This puture seems to be constructed partly from a mistexd thg or m sunderstanding of Ovid, Her. E $\rho$, wi.. if.,
'sic ubi fata vocant, udis abicctus in herbis Ad vadd Masandri concinit albes olor.'
it is difficult to see how our author translated these lines, but the resuit, which must have been chucfly due to his imabinatuon, is rather creditalle to him. Chaucer gives the true sense in the Lesind if Guvit If (inMen, 1355 ff ,
'Ryght so,' quod she, 'as that the white swan
Ayenst has deth begjnath fut to synse.
Kyght so to yow I mahe my compleynyn.e.
129. such a lak of Slowthe, 'such a fault of Stoth.'
137. That is, to put all the slothful in m.nd (of their duty).

157 ff . The general adea of this is taken from the letter of Penelopic to thysses, Ovid, Her. Ep, i, but this is not clusely fullowed in cetana. and it will be noticed that Gower represents the letter as semt wake the saege of Troy stall continued, and appareutly he knows notinng of the great lensth of the wandering afterwards: $c p, 226 \mathrm{ff}$.
170. The reading 'Had' for 'Hath' is gwen by many MSS., including F. We find 'Hath' in the folowng, H2C, SAdTs, W, and ut must certannly be the true reading.

I! 6 ff. Uvid, Her. ER今, i. 2, 'Al mibi rescribas, attamen ipse tet+1'
234. Robert Grosteste's repatation for laming in the sciences earned for him, as for his contemporary Roger Bacon, the charater of a student of magre. in the metrical lufe of Grosteste by Kobert of Wardney (Wharton, Anglad Sacri, i. 333) one chajter is 'De aenco capite quod Oxomae fecit Grosthede ad dutan yuseque determinanda. This author says only that by some accident the bead fell and $=25$ broken, and that its inventor thereupon abandoned the study of fortud. dien sciences.

Naudé in his Apologic four les grands kimimes subfermen de 1hace c'abses 'Robert de Limeolne' and Aibertus. Magras together as supprise 1 makers of speahing images, but the former only on the author ty of Gower, with wholn he had been made acquanted by Selden.

213 f . That is, he lost all that he had done from the time when tie first began to work; an inversion of clauses for the sake of the rhyme. cp. Ii 709 nit.

249, k pr: more propetly 'kepe,' but the infinitive is altracted int, the form of the partuple 'wold,' much as the partiople of tae mand aux laty in modern German takes the form of the ininuse. sce ante rill. 1799.

Su5. hatide I wist, cp. 1. 1888, ii 473. It is the exclamat on of thinse who fall into evil by neglect of proper precaution. The satie sentiment is expressed more fully in 1.809 ,
'Ha, wolde god I hadde knowe'
345. der: This form stands as plural here and 1. 35 a 371 ff. The story of Pygmalion is from Ovid, Metam. x. 243-297.

377. 'Being destined to the labours of love': cp. note on iii. 143 (end).
415. how it were, i. e. 'how so ever it were': cp. 1. 1848.
448. a solein tale, 'a strange tale.' This word 'solein' (or 'soulein'), which English etymologists in search for the origin of 'sullen' report as hardly to be found in French, occurs repeatedly in the Mirour de l'omme in the sense of 'alone,' 'lonely.' For the meaning here assigned to it we may compare the modern use of the word ' singular,' which in Gower's French meant 'lonely.' There is no authority for Pauli's reading 'solempne,' and it gives neither sense nor metre.
451 ff. The tale of Iphis is from Ovid, Metam. ix. 666-797, abbreviated and altered with advantage.
453 ff. The authority of the MSS. is strongly in favour of 'grete : lete' in these lines, and this reading is certainly right. We must take 'lete' as the past participle of the strong verb 'leten' (from 'lَwtan'), meaning 'leave,' 'omit,' and 'grete' as acconmodated to the rhyme. The negative construction following rather suggests 'let,' meaning 'hindered' as ii. 128 ff ., but the rhyme 'let : gret' would be an impossible one. See note on i. 3365 and cp. 1. 1153.
585. And stonde, i. e. 'And I stonde' : cp. i. 1895, &ic., and below, 1. 697.
624. on miself along, so below l. 952, 'It is noght on mi will along,' and Chaucer, Troilus, ii. Ioon, ' On me is nought along thyn yvel fare.'
The use of 'on' for 'of' in this phrase is still known in some dialects.
647 ff . For the Ring of Forgetfulness here spoken of see Petrus Comestor, Exodus vi., where it is related that Moses in command of the Egyptians captured the chief city of the Ethiopians by the help of Tarbis, daughter of their king, and married her in recompense of her services. Then, wishing to return to Egypt and being detained by his wife, 'tanquam vir peritus astrorum duas imagines sculpsit in gemmis huius efficaciae, ut altera memoriam, altera oblivionem conferret. Cumque paribus anulis eas inseruisset, alterum, scilicet oblivionis anulum, uxori praebuit, alterum ipse tulit; ut sic pari amore sic paribus anulis insignirentur. Coepit ergo mulier amoris viri oblivisci, et tandem libere in Aegyptum regressus est ' (Migne, Patrol. vol. 198, p. 1144). Cp. Godfr. Viterb., Pantheon, v. (p. 115).

731 ff. Partly from Ovid, Her. Ep. ii. and Rem. Am. 591-604; but there was probably some other source, for our author would not find anything in Ovid about the transformation into a tree. Many of the details seem to be of his own invention, and he is probably responsible for the variation which makes the visit of Demophon to Thrace take place on the way to Troy instead of on the return. Chaucer's form of the story in the Legend of Good Women is quite different.
733. F is here followed in punctuation.
776. a Monthe day: Ovid, Her. Ep. ii. 3 f.,
'Cormua cum lunae pleno semel orbe coissent, Litoribus nostris ancora pacta tua est.'
782. Cp. Ovid, Ars Am. ii. 354,
'Exarsit velis acrius illa datis.'
787 ff . Except the idea of a letter being sent, Gower takes little here from Ovid.

816 ff . This passage seems mostly of Gower's invention, partly perhaps on the suggestion of the story of Hero and Leander in Ovid, Her. Ep. xix. 33 ff. See Bech in Anglia, v. 347.
do set up. Apparently 'set' is the participle, cp. ii. 1799.
833. al hire one. This idea is emphasized by Ovid, Rem. Am. 591 f.
869. This piece of etymology is perhaps due to our author, who usually adds something of his own to the stories of transformation which he relates; see note on i. 2355. Lydgate says that Phyllis hanged herself upon a filbert-tree, but he perhaps took the notion from Gower:

> ' Upon the walles depeint men myght se
> Temple of Glas, 88.

See the note in Dr. Schick's edition, E.E.T.S. 1891.
893. Cp. Mirour, 5436,
'Lors est il sage apres la mein,' of which this line is an exact reproduction.
904. pleith an aftercast. This looks like a metaphor from casting dice, but it is difficult to see the exact application. It means of course here that he is always too late in what he says and does.
914. come at thin above, i.e. attain to success: cp. Mirour, 25350, 'Car lors est Triche a son dessus.'
964. See note on i. 2677.

979 ff. The story may probably enough be taken from Ovid, Metam. ii. 1-324, but if so it is much abbreviated. which is the Sonne hote, 'which is called the Sun'; cp. ii. 131 f. Possibly, however, 'hote' may be the adjective, with definite termination for the sake of the rhyme. There would be no objection to rhyming with it the adverb of the same form.

1030 ff . The moral drawn by Gower from the story of Phaeton is against going too low, that is abandoning the higher concerns of love owing to slothful negligence. The next story is against aiming too high and neglecting the due claims of service.

1035 ff. Ovid, Metam. viii. 183-235.
1090 f. Cp. Mirour, 5389 ff.
1096. who as evere take: so 'what man' is very commonly used with subjunctive, iii. $2508 \& \mathrm{c}$., but the uncertainty of the construction is shown by 'And thinkth' in the next line. See notes on Prol. 13, 460.

1108 ff. Cp. Mirour, 5395 ff.

1131. A superfluous syllable, such as we have at the pause in this line, is very unusual in Gower's verse ; but cp. v. 447.
1132. lete I ne mai, ' I may not neglect': see note on i. 3365 .
1133. Cp. i. 698, 'And many a contenance he piketh.' It means here perhaps 'thus I keep up a pretence (for staying).'

1245 ff . A somewhat similar story to this is to be found in Andreas Capellanus, De Amore, to which my attention was first called by Mr. Archer. This book (written about 1220) gives imaginary colloquies between different kinds of persons, to illustrate the ways of courtship, ' Plebeius loquitur plebeiae,' 'Plebeius nobili,' ' Nobilis plebeiae,' ' Nobilis nobili.' In this last occurs the story of a squire who saw the god of love leading a great company of ladies in three bands, the first well mounted and well attended, the second well mounted but attended by so many that it was a hindrance rather than a help, and the third in wretched array with lame horses and no attendance. The meaning of the sight is explained to the squire by one of these last, and he is taken to see the appropriate rewards and punishments of each band. He relates what he has seen to his mistress in order to make her more ready to accept his suit (pp. 91-108, ed. Trojel, 1892).

There are some expressions which resemble those which Gower uses, as 'quarum quaelibet in equo pinguissimo et formoso et suavissime ambulante sedebat' (p. 92), cp. 1309 f., ' On faire amblende hors thei sete That were al whyte, fatte and grete.'
And again, 'domina quaedam . . . habens equum macerrimum et turpem et tribus pedibus claudicantem,' cp. 1343 ff. The story, however, is different in many ways from that of Gower. For other similar stories see the article in Romania for January 1900 on the 'Purgatory of Cruel Beauties' by W. A. Neilson.

The tale of Rosiphelee is well told by Gower, and in more than one passage it bears marks of having been carefully revised by the author. The alteration of 1321 f . is peculiarly happy, and gives us one of the best couplets in the Confessio Amantis.
1285. the Sonne Ariste: cp. iii. 1224. The capital letter was perhaps intended to mark 'Ariste' as a substantive.
1309. 'hors' is evidently plural here : so i. 2036 and often.
1320. long and smal, i.e. tall and slender. Adjectives used predicatively with a plural subject take the plural inflection or not according to convenience. Thus in Prol. 81 we have ' Bot for my wittes ben to smale' in rhyme with 'tale.'
1323. beere. This is pret. plur., as 1376 : the same form for pret. subj. 2749.
1330. For pure abaissht: cp. Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 656, 'And with that thought for pure ashamed she Gan in hir hed to pulle.' The parallel, to which my attention was called by Prof. Me ${ }^{\text {Cormick, suggests }}$ the idea that 'abaissht' is a participle rather than a noun, and the use of the past participle with 'for' in this manner occars several times in Lydgate, e.g. 'for unknowe,' 'meaning from ignorance,' Temple of Glas, 632, 'for astonied,' 934, 1366 , and so with an adjective, 'for pure wood' in the English Rom. of the Rose, 276. See Dr. Schick's note on Lydgate, Temple of Glas, 632.
1422. That I ne hadde, 'I would that I had': cp. v. 3747,

> 'Ha lord, that he ne were alonde!'
' to late war' is in a kind of loose apposition to the subject.
1429. swiche. Rather perhaps 'swich,' as ii. 566 f , v. 377. Most MSS. have 'such.'

1454 (margin). The author dissociates himself personally from the extreme doctrines enunciated in the text, as at first he took care to remind his readers that the character of a lover was for him only an assumed one (i. 63 ff. margin).
1490. and longe er that sche changeth &c. This is a puzzling sentence, and we are not helped by the punctuation of the MSS., which for the most part have a stop after 'herte.' I can only suppose that it means 'and is long before she changes her heart in her youth to marriage.' We can hardly make 'longe' a verb, ' and may be eager until she changes,' because of the lines which follow.

1516. 'Whether it be of man or woman.'

1537 ff . In the original this is different, ' Heu me, filia mea, decepisti me et ipsa decepta es : aperui enim os meum ad Dominum, et aliud facere non potero.' Gower deals freely here as elsewhere with the narrative, especially in the matter of speeches.
1563. fourty daies : in the original 'duobus mensibus.'

1632 f. Cp. Mirour, 11694.
1649. as me thenketh . . . That, equivalent to 'me thinketh ... That,' either ' as' or 'That ' being redundant.
1659. The best MSS. give 'hepen' here, not 'hepene.'

1723. which I travaile fore. We have here rather a remarkable instance of emphasis thrown on the preposition, with a modification of form for the sake of the rhyme: cp. ii. 565.
1741. On whether bord, i. e. on which tack : technical terms of the sea occur several times in the Confessio Amantis, e.g.v. 3119, 7048, viii. 1983. 1810. made: cp. Prol. 300.

1815 ff . Gower seems to have dealt rather freely with this story. The usual form of it gives Palamedes, not Nauplius, as the person who came to fetch Ulysses, and makes Ulysses yoke a horse and an ox together in a plough as a sign of madness : see Hyginus, Fab. xcv. As to the name of Nauplus, see notes on iii. 973, 1002.
1833. That is, 'feigning to be mad,' not 'like one who feigns to be mad' : see note on i. 695 .

1847 ff . 'He thought to try if he were mad or no, however it might please Ulysses,' that is, whether it pleased him or not. 'Hou' seems to be for 'How so evere' : cp. l. 415.
1875. tothe, written so when the emphasis falls on the preposition, see note on i. 232.

1901 ff. Ovid, Her. Ep. xiii.
1927. F has a stop after 'londeth,' thus throwing the clause, 'and was the ferste there Which londeth,' into a parenthesis.

1935 ff . I Sam. xxviii., where the witch is called ' mulier pythonem habens.'

1968 ff . The story of the education of Achilles by Chiron, as we have it here, is apparently taken, directly or indirectly, from Statius, Achill. ii. 121 (407) ff.,

- Nunquam ille imbelles Ossaea per avia damas Sectari, aut timidas passus me cuspide lyncas Sternere, sed tristes turbare cubilibus ursos Fulmineosque sues, et sicubi maxima tigris Aut seducta iugis fetae spelunca leaenae. Ipse sedens vasto facta exspectabat in antro, Si sparsus magno remearem sanguine; nec me Ante nisi inspectis admisit ad oscula telis.'

2014 ff . The argument is to the effect that Prowess, which is acknowledged to be the virtue opposed to Sloth, see Mirour, 10136 &c., must show itself partly in the spirit of warlike boldness, 'the corage of hardiesce,' leading to such undertakings as those of which the Lover had disputed the necessity.
2040. And that, i. e. 'And as to that': cp. Prol. 122.

2045 ff . The fight between Hercules and Achelous is related in detail by Ovid, Metam. ix. 31-88. Some parts of this seem to be reproduced by Gower, but the details are not very exactly copied. For the story generally he had some other authority, whence he got for example the names 'Oënes' and 'Calidoyne.'

It is to be noted that Gower gives 'Achelons' instead of Achelous, as he does also in the Traitie, vii. 5, where the story is shortly told in the same way as here, and there we find 'Achelontis' in the margin as the genitive case. He ought to have been preserved from the mistake by the occurrence of the name in Ovid's verse.
2054. For these two pillars cp. Chaucer, Cant. Tales, B 3307 f., but Gower supposes them to have been both set up in the 'desert of India,' ' El grant desert d'Ynde superiour' as he has it in Traitié, vii. 1, whereas according to Chaucer one was set up in the East and the other in the West, to mark the extreme bounds of the world.

2135. For the stories of 'Pantasilee' and Philemenis we may refer to the Roman de Troie, 23283 ff. and 25663-25704.

2200 ff . From this question arises the inevitable discussion of the nature of 'gentilesse' and how far it depends upon birth, riches or personal merit. Gower accepts only the last qualification, and argues for it after the fashion of John Ball, though he was neither a Lollard nor a social revolutionist : cp. Mirour, 23389 ff . For the general subject cp. Dante, Convito, iv. 10, Roman de la Rose, 18807.f. (ed. Méon), Chaucer, Cant. Tales, D 1109 ff .

To Gower we must grant the merit of clearness and conciseness in handling the well-worn theme.

2208 f. Cp. Dante, Convito, iv. 3.
2305 ff . 'And love is of profit also as regards women, so that they may be the better "affaited." '
2314. make it queinte, 'behave gently': cp. 'make it tough,' Chaucer, Troilus, v. 101. For the meaning of 'queinte' see the quotations in Godefroy's Dictionary under ' cointe.'
2325. I John iii. 14.
2342. This is from Job v. 7.

2396 ff. Many of these names are unknown to me, and Warton's conjectures on the subject are very wild, but some points may be illustrated from Godfrey of Viterbo. For example, as regards the first we find,
'Septem quas legimus Cham primus scripserat artes.'
Pantheon, iii. (p. 88).
2401. Godf. Vit., Pantheon, vi. (p. 133), 'Tunc Cadmus Graecas literas sedecim fecit.'
2410. Termegis. The word is a dissyllable for the metre. Probably this name stands for Termegistus (i. e. Trismegistus), and in that case we must throw the accent upon the final syllable and pass lightly over the preceding one.

2418 ff . I suspect that 'Poulins' means Apollo or Apollinis: cp. Pantheon, vi. (p. 133), 'Apollo etiam citharam condidit et artem medicinalem invenit.'
2422. Cp. Godf. Vit., Panth. v. (p. 121),
' Tunc et Prometheus, qui filius est Atlantis Dat statuas hominis humano more meantes.'
2427. 'Jadahel' is the Jabal (or Jebal) of the Bible (Gen. iv. 20). Godfrey of Viterbo calls him by the same name and makes the same statement about his hunting and fishing :
' In mundo Iadahel posuit tentoria primus, Venator prior ipse fuit feritate ferinus, Primus et invalidis retia mersit aquis.'

Panth. ii. (p. 77).
2439 ff. Godf. Vit., Panth. iv. (p. 98),
' Saturnus statuit super aequora vela moueri, Denarios posuit commercia rite mereri.

Aedificans Sutrium dum vivit ibi dominatur, Triticeum semen primus in urbe serens.'
2462 ff . For the seven bodies and four spirits of Alchemy cp. Chaucer, Cant. Tales, G 818 ff. Mercury, it will be noticed, is reckoned both as a body and as a spirit, but some authorities called tbis a spirit only and reckoned six metallic bodies.
2476. after the bok it calleth, 'according as the book calls it.'

2488 ff. Cp. 2565 ff.
2522. Cp. Chaucer, Cant. Tales, G 862 f.
2533. Thre Stones. According to some authors, as Hortulanus (MS. Ashmole 1478, iv.), there was but one stone, the Elixir, which had vegetable, animal and mineral qualities or functions; but in Lydgate, Secrees of the Philosophres, 1. 530 (E.E.T.S.), we have,
> 'And of stones, specially of three, Oon mineral, another vegetatyff,' &c.; and the editor quotes from Rosarium Philosophorum, 'Tres sunt lapides et tres sales sunt, ex quibus totum magisterium consistit, scilicet mineralis, plantalis et animalis.' In the Secreta Secretorum, however, the stone seems to be one only, see the chapter 'De lapide animali vegetabili.'

2606. Hermes, i. e. Hermes Trismegistus, to whom the invention of the science was attributed.
on the ferst, 'the very first,' cp. vi. 1481. It may be questioned, however, whether the theory put forward by C. Stoffel in Englische Studien, xxvii. 253 ff., is the correct explanation of this expression, which survived to Elizabethan times (Shaksp., Cymb. i. 6. 165, 'he is one the truest mannered'). He takes 'on' in the sense of the Latin 'unus' in 'iustissimus unus,' to mean 'alone,' 'above all.' It is perhaps more likely that the usual explanation, which regards it as an elliptical expression for 'one who was the first,' is correct, especially in view of such expressions as 'two the first,' 'three the noblest,' & $c_{n}$, which also occur in the fourteenth century. The use of 'on' ('oon') for 'a person' is common enough, as in the expressions 'so good on,'

CONFESSIO AMANTIS

'so worthi on,' it. 1217, 1240, and 'Oon Thelous,' it. logz. We fint a similar expression in Gower's French, e.g. Ihtrour, 2462.

2c0s. A work hy Geber, 'Super Artem Alkemie,' in six books, tranjlated from Arabic into Latm, may be found in MS. Ashmole $13^{\circ} 4$. It seems to treat in a practical and systematic manner of the methoud of transmutation of metals into gold.
2609. 'Ortolan ' is the E.nglishman John Gartand, called Hortalamus. for which name see the note in MS. Ashmole 147 ! iv. prefixed to an English translation of has 'Commentary on the Smaragdine Tabie of Hermes.'

Morien is said to have been a hermit in the mountans neat Jcrusalem. The two 'books of Morien' in the form of dialegusz between him and Kalid the son of Gestd may be read in Lat n (translated from Arabic) in MS. Digby 162.
2610. A short treatise of Avtcen on Alchemy may be found in $$ 15$. Aslim. 1420.
2022. the paryfte meaticane. The inflexion is perhaps in imatation of the definite form of the English adjective, $25: 5$ vin $2: 68,499$ t while in 1.2522 , where the accent is thrown back, we have 'the parfit Eixurt: It is possible, however, that this is a case of the French femmine form such as we have in i. 2677, i. 3507 , iv. 964, cp. i. 63 . Sn perhaps it. 3243 , 'O thou divine pourveance,' and h1, 23. 'O thou genti.e Venus.'
2637. Carmente': cp. Godf. Vit., Panth. vi. Ip 135).
2641. Dindymus here means the grammarian Didymus, a followet of the school of Atistarchus and a very voluminous witer on Greek language and literature. Our author here classes Aristarchus and Didymus with Donatus, and supposes them all to be concerned w th the Latin tongue.
2648. Tullus woth Cithero. It is appatent from this passage, which bas been differently given without any authority in the promed editions, that Gower supposed Tulhus and Cicero to be two different persons. There would have been reason to suspect this from the passage in the seventh book where he refers to the debate on the death sentence of the Catulne conspirators, speaking of Tullus as his authorty for the rules of rhetortc there illustrated, and 'Cithero' as the consu!, without any hint that they are the same person (vil. 1588 if 1. In Cower's French works Tultus (Tutles) is the only name used. The form Cithero (or Scithero) is used also by Chaucer, Conl. Joles, F 722. 2738 f. Cp. Mirour, 5185 ff.
2749. beere, past tense subutunctive, ep. 1323.

2792. Thus casting with the dice would not be for ordinary ganabl. of, but for divinng characters and telling fortumes in matters of love Each combmation produced by the three dice thrown would have a certain meaning determined beforchand, as we see by the plece called The Chaunces of the Dyse in the Bodleian MSS. Fairfax 16 and Bodl. 638. For example, the throw of six, four and ace is there explained by the following stanza :
' O mekenesse of vertu principal, That may be founde in eny creature! In this persone of kunnynge ordinal Is ful assembled, I yow dar assure, The lorde of vertu and al vices cure, Perfit beaute grounded without envye, Assured trust withoute gelousye.'
And similarly there is a stanza, complimentary or otherwise, for each possible throw.
2813. Hire daunger: see note on i. 2443.
2855. whi ne were it, 'would it were': cp. the expression 'that he ne were,' vii. 3747, &c.

2895 f. Apparently he means that his dreams were of no such harmless things as sheep and their wool, or perhaps not of business matters, alluding to wool as the staple of English commerce.

2901 f. Cp. Roman de la Rose, 2449-2479.
2905. I ne bede nevere awake: cp. Romaunt of the Rose, 791, ' Ne bode I never thennes go.' It means apparently ' I should desire never to awake' ('I should not pray ever to awake').
2924. in my wrytinges. The author forgets here that he is speaking in the person of the Confessor.

2927 ff. This is from Ovid, Metam. xi. 266-748, where the story is told at great length. Gower follows some parts of it, as the description of the House of Sleep and its surroundings, very closely.

Chaucer tells the story in the Book of the Duchess, but he has not been so successful in reproducing it as Gower. It is here introduced only as an illustration of the truth of dreams, but with its description of the House of Sleep it is very appropriate also in other respects to the subject of Somnolence, which is under discussion.
2928. Trocinic, from the adjective 'Trachinia,' in such expressions as 'Trachinia tellus,' Metain. xi. 269.
2973. The reading of all the best MSS. in this line is 'he': (S however is defective). We cannot doubt that the author meant to write 'sche,' for in what follows he regularly refers to Iris as female; but the mistake apparently escaped his notice, and we must regard the reading 'she' in the two copies in which I have found it as an unauthorized correction. Cbaucer makes the messenger male, but does not name him. 2977-3055. This passage very happily follows Ovid, Met. xi. 589645. Our author gives all the essential features, but rearranges them freely and adds details of his own.
2996. Metam. xi. 608,

> ' Ianua, ne verso stridores cardine reddat, Nulla domo tota.'

3009 ff. Metam. xi. 602 ff.,
'saxo tamen exit ab imo Rivus aquae Lethes, per quem cum murmure labens Invitat somnos crepitantibus unda lapillis.'

3015 ff . Metam. xi. 610 ff.,
'At medio torus est ebeno sublimis in antro, Plumeus, unicolor, pullo velamine tectus, Quo cubat ipse deus membris languore solutis. Hunc circa passim varias imitantia formas Somnia vana iacent,' &c.
3044. 'Ithecus' is a misreading of 'Icelos,' as 'Panthasas' in 1.3049 of ' Phantasos.'
3061 ff. Here Gower has made a real improvement in the story by employing the two other ministers of Sleep, whose functions have been described, to represent the scene of the tempest and the wreck, while Morpheus plays the part of Ceyx in the same scene. Ovid introduces the characters of Icelos and Phantasos, but makes no use of them, sending Morpheus alone to relate what has taken place, instead of representing it in action, as it would more naturally appear in a dream.
3159. mi herte: more usually ' $\min$ herte' as 3139, and so generally before ' h ', whether aspirated or not, e. g. 3561 ; but 'for mi housebondes were,' vii. 4813, (with ' myn housebonde' below, 4829).
3187 ff . This seems to be for the most part original. A hint may have been given by the lines of Ovid in which it is suggested that Aurora might have used a somewhat similar prayer :

'At si quem manibus Cephalum complexa teneres, Clamares, Lente currite, noctis equi.'

Amor. i. 13, 39.
3222. The sun enters Capricorn on Dec. 21.
3273. that he arise : so 3374 , 'Til it be dai that I arise,' and v. 3422, ' Til dai cam that sche moste arise.'

The verb seems here to be attracted into the subjunctive by the indefinite meaning of 'Til.' In the other passages the mood is uncertain.
3317 ff. Ovid, Metam. i. 588-723, much abbreviated. It was, however, Jupiter who turned Io into a cow.
3386. for thou thee schalt avise, 'in order that thou mayest consider.' 3414. that I nere of this lif, 'would that I were out of this life.' For 'that I nere' cp. note on 1422. For 'of this lif' cp. vii. 2883, ' whan he were of dawe.'
3438 f. 'And yet he (Obstinacy) cannot support his own cause by any argument but by headstrong wilfulness.'

For the expression 'of hed' we may compare the Latin expression quoted by Du Cange＇de testa esse，＇explaned＇esse obstinatum＇（Ital． ＇essere di testa＇），and the French adjective＇testu，＇
＇Car fol estorent et testu，＇\＆c
Froissart says of Pope Urban VI that after his election＇it s＇en outrecuida et enorguilli，et volt user de poissance et de teste，＇which is translated by Berners，＇he waxed proude and worked all on heed．＇ We find also the Latin adjective＇capitosus＇used by Gower in the margin at the beginning of the Cronica Tripertifa，and the adverb ＇capitose，＇meaning＇in a headstrong manner，＇in Walsingham，Hist． Anglica，e．g．＇Regem contra regni consuetudinem Cancelharium de－ pesuisse capitose，＇vol．ii．p． 70 （Rolls Series）．

The usual way of reading the sentence has been to punctuate after ＇skile＇and to take＇bot of hed＇with the next line，＇but he wastes away in his condition＇（＇hed＇from a supposed＇h⿶凵⿱⿱一口⿴囗十刂灬丶＇akin to the suffix＇thed＇or＇hede＇）．This word perhaps occurs Conf．Am．ii， 2066 ，but it would give no very good sense here，and it is doubtful whether it would be rhymed with＇ded．＇The suffix＇－hed＇＇－hede＇ apparently has＇$e$＇in Gower＇s rhymes．Again，if so marked a break in the middle of the line were intended，the Fairfax MS，would almost certanly have had a stop to indicate it，as in $3423,3431,3458,3459$. 3484,3485 ，to quote instances only from the same page of the MS．

For the use of＇avowe＇in this sense，cp．v． 124.
3515 ff．The story is based upon Ovid，Metam，xiv．698－761．Our author，however，has reversed the position of the lover and his mistress． In Ovid Anaxarete is a bigh－born maid of the race of Teucer，while Jphis is＇humili de stirpe creatus．＇Moreover，the story is considerably developed by Gower，to whom belong the speech of Iphis，the whole account of the grief and self－condemnation of Araxarathen，the details of the funeral and the tomb，and finally the very successful epitaph． Ovid says that she saw from a window the body of Iphis being carried by for burial，and was fortbwith turned into stone，and that as witness of the truth of his tale a statue may still be seen at Salamis．There is nothing said about remorse on her part，rather the opposite is implied．

3516．Our author supposes this to be the same as the person men－ tioned in iii． 2645 ff ．（who is really Teuthras king of Myssa）．This is Teucer son of Telamon，founder of Salamis in Cyprus．

3542．Punctuated in accordance with F ．
3589．Thi Daunger，＇thy unwillingness to love＇：see note on i ． 2443.

3658 \＆．Naturally the expression of Ovid，
＇Veneris quoque nomine templum Prospicientis habet，＇

LIB. V.

18. it cam to londe, wherof, 'the occasion arose, whence,' &c.
19. him supposeth: the verb is used impersonally, like 'him thenketh.' Probably the confusion between 'thinke' and 'thenke' gave rise to this expression.
29 ff. So below, 348 ff. : cp. Mirour, 7585 ff.
47 f . This seems, as it stands at present, to be an application of the instances to the case of the avaricious man, 'Thus he so possesses his wealth that he in truth possesses nothing,' ('that ' for 'so that'). The original couplet however, as read by all the unrevised class of manuscripts, applies to the case of the sheep, and we may take it so also in its revised form ('Thus' being answered by 'that ').

49 f. Cp. Mirour, 7645 ff.,
'L'en dist, mais c'est inproprement,
Qe l'averous ad grant argent ;
Mais voir est que l'argent luy a:
En servitude ensi le prent,' &c.
65. nevere hier. Note that there is no elision before ' hier.'

81 f . 'And yet, though I held her fast (as a miser his hoard), my life would be a perpetual feast, even on Fridays.' If he possessed the treasure, his avarice would not allow him to let it go, and yet he would not keep it unused, as a miser does his gold. So later, 93, 'Though I should hold it fast, I should so be doing that which I were bound to do.'
95. pipe, 'be content': perhaps from the idea of a bird-catcher piping or whistling for birds, but failing to snare them.
127-136. Note the repetition of the word 'gold' in an emphatic position.
141 ff . Ovid, Metam. xi. 85-147, freely treated as usual. The debate of Midas as to which of three things he should prefer (ll. 180-245) is all due to our author. In Ovid he chooses without hesitation.
143. Cillenus, i.e. Silenus.

154 f. Gower attributes the action of the king to pure courtesy, Ovid to the fact that Midas recognized in Silenus a fellow-mystic.
249 ff. Cp. Mirour, 7603 ff.
272 ff. Ovid, Metam. xi. 106,
'Laetus abit gaudetque malo Berecyntius heros: Pollicitique fidem tangendo singula temptat. Ilice detraxit virgam, virga aurea facta est : Tollit humo saxum, saxum quoque palluit auro': &c.
298. See note on i. 10.

315-332. This is an expansion of Metam. xi. 146 f.,
'Ille perosus opes silvas et rura colebat, Panaque montanis habitantem semper in antris.'
$\mathbf{3 6 3} \mathrm{ff}$. The punishment referred to is certainly more appropriate for avarice than for the offence committed by Tantalus: cp. Hor. Sat. i. i. 68. The story of Tantalus is alluded to several times in Ovid, as Metam. iv. 458, and told by Hyginus, Fab. lsxaii. Perhaps our author rather followed Fulgentius, Mythol. ii. 18, who quotes from Petronius, ' Divitis haec magni facies erit, omnia late
Qui tenet, et sicco concoquit ore famem.'
Cp. Mirour, 7621 f.,

> ' Dame Avarice est dite auci Semblable au paine Tantali,' &c.
370. This seems to mean that it serves for the punishment of the avaricious; but from what follows in 391 ff. we gather that the pains of avarice in this life also are to be compared with this particular pain of hell, and so the application is made in the Mirour, 7621-7632.
388. which a wreche, 'what a punishment.'
418. suie: cp. Prol. 460.
447. For the superfluous syllable at the pause in the middle of this line cp. iv. 113 I.
496. berth an homd: equivalent to 'berth on hond,' l. 546.
519. Count 'evel' as a monosyllable for the verse; so regularly, e.g. iii. 1272, vii. 2773.
526. janglere. The final ' -e ' is not pronounced here.

558f. the gold .. . The which was leid upon the bok. The gold in question is that which is laid upon the service-book in payment of the marriage fees: 'and the Man shall give unto the Woman a Ring, laying the same upon the book with the accustomed duty to the Priest and Clerk.' Marriage Service.
564. 'though he will not praise it,' ie. he gives her no credit for it : cp. Prol. 154.

665. Cp. iii. 1362 ff.

729 ff . From this arises the very ill-advised digression of $11.747-1970$ about the various forms of Religion. There is no more reason why this should come in here than anywhere else, indeed if the question of false gods was to be raised at all, it ought to have come in as an explanation of the appearance of Venus and Cupid in the first book. Many stories have been told, for example those of Acteon, of the Gorgons, of Tiresias, of Phoebus and Daphne, of Phaton, of Ceix, of Argus, and of Midas, which required the explanation quite as much as this one, and the awkwardness of putting it all into the mouth of the priest of Venus is inexcusable.

The main authority followed in this account of the religions of Chaldea, Egypt, and Greece is the Vita Barlaam et Josaphat, cap. xxvii. (Migne, Patrol. vol. 73, p. 548 ff.), but Gower adds much to it, especially as regards the gods and goddesses of Greece.
763. of Accidence: cp. ii. 3210.
774. hevenly: so Prol. 918, but 'hevenely' i. 834, 3136, the second syllable in that case being syncopated, as regularly in ' hevene.' So also in the case of 'evermore' and 'everemore' as compared with 'evere.'
782. les, that is, 'falsehood.'
798. Isirus, i. e. Osiris.
811. thegipcienes. This must be the true reading for the sake of the metre, both here and in 1. 821, though the best copies fail to give it. A similar case occurs in L. 1119, but there the authority for 'Jupiteres' is made much stronger by the accession of $S$.
897. Mynitor, i. e. Numitor.

899 f. that Remus and Romulus. For the position of 'that' cp. 1166, 1249.
925. To gete him with: cp. i. 452.
1004. wel the more lete by, 'much the more esteemed': cp. Piers Plowman, A vi. 105, ' to lete wel by thyselve,' and xi. 29: also with ' of,' v. 5840 ; cp. Piers Plowm. iv. 160, ' Love let of hire lighte and lewte yit lasse,' Orm. 7523, ' uss birth. . . lætenn wel off othre menn.'
1009. Nonarcigne. The name is taken no doubt from the adjective ' Nonacrinus' (from Nonacris), used as in Ovid, Met. i. 690, where it occurs in the story of Pan and Syrinx, told by Mercury to lull Argus to sleep: cp. Conf. Am. iv. 3345 ff.
1040. Cp. Prol. 118.

1043 ff . The sentence is interrupted and then begun again at 1. 105 I : see note on i. 98 .
1063. That he, i.e. 'In that he.' Gower has here mistaken his authority, which says ' post autem eum propter Tyndarei Lacedaemonii filium a Jove fulmine percussum interiisse narrant.' Vita Barl. et Jos. xxvii.
1097. no reason inne : cp. i. 3209.
1163. Philerem, presumably Philyra, but there is no authority for making her the mother of Jupiter.
1249. that : cp. 899. Apparently it means, 'that Diane of whom I am to speak.' The necessities of rhyme are responsible for these forms of speech.
1276. 'Which may not attain to reason.'
1323. The paragraph is made to begin here in the MSS. with what is, strictly speaking, its second line, because it is marked by a proper name which indicates its subject, the first line being a mere formal introduction. So also below, 1453 : cp. ii. 2451.
1337. The name 'Dorus' seems to have been suggested by that of Doris, mother of the Nereids.
1389. alle danger, that is, all reluctance or coyness.
1397. Armene, i. e. Harmonia.
1398. Andragene Androgynus or Hermaphroditus.
1428. noght forsake To ben, i. e. ' not refuse to be.'
1449. 'whether it was of weal or wo': 'wher' for ' whether.'
1453. See note on 1323.

As for the letters said to have been exchanged between Alexander and the king of the Bragmans (or Brahmins), we find them at length in the Historia Alexandri Magni de Preliis, which was the source of most of the current stories about Alexander. The passage referred to is as follows: ' Tot deos colis quot in tuo corpore membra portas. Nam hominem dicis paruum mundum, et sicut corpus hominis habet multa membra, ita et in celo dicis multos deos existere. Iunonem credis esse deum cordis, eo quod iracundia nimia mouebatur. Martem vero deum pectoris esse dicis, eo quod princeps extitit preliorum. Mercurium deum lingue vocas, ex eo quod plurimum loquebatur. Herculem deum credis brachiorum, eo quod duodecim virtutes exercuit preliando. Bachum deum gutturis esse putas, eo quod ebrietatem primus inuenit. Cupidinem esse deam dicis, eo quod fornicatrix extitit ; tenere dicis facem ardentem, cum qua libidinem excitat et accendit, et ipsam deam iecoris etiam existimas. Cererem deam ventris esse dicis, et Venerem, eo quod fuit mater luxurie, deam genitalium membrorum esse profers' (e 2, ed. Argent. 1489).

Cp. the English alliterative Wars of Alexander, E. E. T. S., 1886, IL. 4494 ff . There is no mention of Minerva in either of these.

1520 ff. The usual account is to the effect that Ninus set up the first idol: see below, 1541. What we have here seems to be taken from Fulgentius, Mythol. ii. $\%$ where the authorities here cited, Nicagoras and Petronius, are quoted. The passage is apparently corrupt, and our author obviously did not quite understand it: ' Et quamvis Nicagoras in Disthemithea libro quem scripsit, primum illum formasse idolum referat, et quod vulturi iecur praebeat livoris quasi pingat imaginem : unde et Petronius Arbiter ait, "Qui vultur iecor intimum pererrat"' &c.
From the same author, Mythol. i. 1, he got the story about Syrophanes, who set up an image of his dead son, to which offerings were made by those who wished to gain his favour.
1541. Cp. Godfr. Vit., Panth. iv. (p. 102), whose account agrees very nearly with what we have here, though he represents this image as the first example of an idol, under the heading, 'Quare primum idolum in mundo et quo tempore fuit.' Cp. Guido, Hist. Troiana, lib. x (e 5, ed. Argent. 1494).
1559. Godf. Vit., Panth. iv. (p. 112) : 'His temporibus apud Egyptios constructum est idolum magnum in honorem Apis, Regis Argivorum; quidam tamen dicunt in honorem Ioseph, qui liberavit eos a fame; quod idolum Serapis vocabatur, quasi idolum Apis.'

1571 ff. Hist. Alexandri, f 1 vo, ed. Argent. 1489: 'Exiens inde Alexander cum Candeolo profecti sunt iter diei vnius, et venerunt ad quandam speluncam magnam et hospitati sunt $i b i$. Dixitque Candeolus, " Omnes dii concilium in ista spelunca concelebrant." Cum hoc audisset Alexander, statim fecit victimas diis suis, et ingressus in spelancam solus vidit ibi caligines maximasque nubes stellasque lucentes, et inter ipsas stellas quendam deum maximum,' &c.

Cp. the English alliterative Wars of Alexarader, Ill 5387 ff .
1624. herd me seid: see note on i. 3153.
1636. There is a stop after 'Forbad' in F. The meaning is that he gave a prohibition commanding them not to bow to an image.
1677. Rikt as who sette: the verb apparently is subjunctive.

1746 ff . What purports to be the original passage is quoted in the margin of the second recension.
1747. For the form of expression cp. vi. 56 f,

> 'O which a sorwe

It is a man be drinkeles ! ${ }^{\circ}$
1756 ff. The substance of this is to be found in Gregory, Is i. Reg. viii. 7 f. (Migne, Patrol. vol. 79. p. 222): 'Et quidem, nisi Adam peccaret, Redemptorem nostrum carnem suscipere nostram non oporteret.... . Si ergo pro peccatoribus venit, si peccata deessent, eum venire non oporteret . . . Magna quippe sunt mala quae per primae culpae meritum patimur, sed quis electus nollet peiora perpeti, quam tantum Redemptorem non habere?'

1781 ff . Note that here twelve lines are replaced in the second recension by ten, one of the couplets (or the substance of it) having been inserted earlier, after 1. 1742.
1826. 'So that his word explained his deed': 'arawhte' from 'arechen' (äreccan).

1831 ff. Roman de Troic, 25504-25559.
1848-1959. With this compare Prol. 193-498.
1865. 'And they do every man what he pleases,' the verb being plural.
1879. Pseudo: cp. Mirour, 21625 ff.,
' Il estoit dit grant temps y a
Q'un fals prophete a nous vendra,
Q'ad noun Pseudo le decevant;
Sicomme aignel se vestira,
Et cuer du loup il portera.
O comme les freres maintenant
A Pseudo sont bien resemblant!'
So also Vox Clam. iv. 787 f.,

> ' Nomine sunt plures, pauci tamen ordine fratres; Vt dicunt aliqui, Pseudo prophetat ibi.'

It seems that the word 'pseadopropheta,' used Rev. xix. 20 and elsewhere, was read 'Pseudo propheta,' and 'Pseudo' was taken as a proper name. This was combined with the idea of the wolf in sheep's clothing suggested by Matt. vii. 15, 'Attendite a falsis prophetis,' &c., and the application was made especially to the friars.
1888. 'And this I am brought to believe by the argument that where those above neglect their duty, the people are ignorant of the truth, (as they now are).'

1900 ff. Cp. Mirour, 20065 ff., and Vox Clamantis, iii. 903. The reference is to Gregory, Hom. in Evang. xvii. (Migne, Patrol. vol. 76, p. 1148): 'Ibi Petrus cum Iudaea conversa, quam post se traxit, apparebit: ibi Paulus conversum, ut ita dixerim, mundum ducens. Ibi Andreas post se Achaiam, ibi Iohannes Asiam, Thomas Indiam in conspectum sui regis conversam ducet . . . . Cum igitur tot pastores cum gregibus suis ante aeterni pastoris oculos venerint, nos miseri quid dicturi sumus, qui ad Dominum nostrum post negotium vacui redimus?'
1919. Cp. Mirour, 16662, ' U q'il ert mesmes auditour.' The metaphor from rendering accounts in the Exchequer is especially appropriate here for the prelates.
1930. his lordes besant hedde: Matt. xxv. 18.
1944. every Prelat holde, 'let every Prelate hold.'

1952 ff. Coloss. iii. 5, 'avaritiam, quae est simulacrorum servitus.'

[^0]:    'To Chaucer, that is flour of rhethorique
    In english tonge and excellent poete, This wot I wel, no thing may I do like, Though so that I of makinge entermete; And Gower, that so craftely doth trete As in his book(es) of moralite, Though 1 to hem in makinge am unmete, Yit moste I schewe it forth that is in me.'
    Bokenham in his Lives of the Saints repeatedly speaks of Gower, Chaucer and Lydgate, the last of whom was then still living, as the three great lights

[^3]:    ${ }^{1}$ B. ten Brink, Geschiihte der Engl. Litt. ii. 141.

[^4]:    ${ }^{2}$ This date has hitherto been omitted from the text of the printed editions.
    ${ }^{2}$ The last two lines, which contain the mention of the earl of Derby, are omitted in some MSS. of the first recension, and this may be an indication that the author circulated some copies without them. A full account of the various recensions of the poem is given later, under the head of 'Text.'
    'The term 'epilogue' is used for convenience to designate the conclusion of the poem after viii. 2940, but no such designation is used by the author: similarly 'preface' means here the opening passage of the Prologue (II. 1-92).

    - 'Minoris etatis causa inde excusabilem pronuncians.'

[^5]:    ' Dr. Karl Meyer, in his dissertation John Gower's Besichungen su Chaucer and König Richard II (1889), takes account of these various notes of time, having made himself to some extent acquainted with the MSS., but his conclusions are in my opinion untenable.

[^6]:    ${ }^{1}$ This has been equally the procedure of Prof. Hales on the one hand, who endeavours to throw back the composition of the first recension to an extravagantly early period, and of Dr. Karl Meyer on the other, who wishes to bring down the final form of the book to a time later than the deposition of Richard II. The theory of the latter, that the sixteenth year of King Richard is given as the date of the original completion of the poem, and not of the revised preface, is sufficiently refuted by the date 'fourteenth year' attached to the rewritten epilogue.

[^7]:    ${ }^{1}$ For the connexion between this and the Confessto Amantis see L. Bech in Anglia, v. 313 f.

[^8]:    ' Lydgate apparently did not take Chaucer's censure very seriously, for he quite needlessly introduced the tale of Canace into his Falls of Princes, following Gower's rendering of it.
    ${ }^{2}$ See for example the picture of Nebuchadnezzar transformed into an ox, - Tho thoghte him colde grases goode,' &c. (i. 2976 ff.), the account of the jealous husband, who after charging his wife quite unreasonably with wishing she had another there in his stead, turns away from her in bed and leaves her to weep all the night, while he sleeps (v. 545 ff .), and the description of the man who entertains his wife so cheerfully on his return home with tales of the good sport that he has had, but carefully avoids all reference to the occurrence which would have interested her most (v. 6irgff.).

[^9]:    ${ }^{1}$ The reading in the Latin note at the beginning of 'quarto (decimo)' for 'sexto decimo' is probably due to a mistake, for we find 'sextenthe ' in the text of 1. 25. It may be noted that the MS. mentioned by Pauli as containing the rewritten preface and also the Chaucer verses (New Coll. 326) is a hybrid, copied from two different manuscripts.

[^10]:    * for King Richard's sake, to whom my allegiance belongs and for whom I pray. It chanced that as I rowed in a boat on the flowing Thames under the town of New Troy, I met my liege lord, and he bad me come from my boat into his barge, and there he laid upon me a charge to write some new thing which he himself might read. Thus I am the more glad to write, and I have the less fear of envious blame. A gentle heart praises without malice, but the world is full of cvil tongues and my king's command shall nevertheless be fulfilled. Though I have long been sick, yet I will endeavour to write a book which may be wisdom to the wise and play to those who desire to play. But the proverb says that a good beginning makes a good end : therefore I will here begin the prologue of my book, speaking partly of the former state of the world and partly of the present.

[^11]:    ' The difference in the MS. usually consists only in the line drawn over the final on. So also often in the case of the words discussed below, channce, dannce, emchaunte, &c.

[^13]:    ${ }^{1}$ In other cases, as with the group broke, lobe, spoke, wroke (past participles), and jobe (sybst.), there are no rhyme-words with of from & by which a distinction can be established.

[^14]:    ${ }^{1}$ Archivfürn. Sprachen, 89, p. 392. As I sometimes have occasion to criticize statements in this paper, I take the opportunity here-of acknowledging its merit, as the only careful study lately attempted of Gower's language.

[^15]:    - This is a regular use in Chaurer also, e.g. Camb, Tules, E 1719 :
    'Fulfitd of alle beautee and plesaunce,' but it has not always been clearly recognized.

[^16]:    ${ }^{1}$ In the Praise of Peace however the MS. has here for hire, ll. 108, 329, cp. 254. F has hire for here once accidentally, iii. 901.

[^17]:    ${ }^{1}$ In a few cases, as Prol. 543, i. 183, 1280, v. 3393, vi. 2062, the grammatically correct form has been printed in the text from less good MSS. and against the combined authority of $F$ and $S$. On a review of the whole subject this does not now seem to me satisfactory.

[^18]:    ${ }^{1}$ Prof. Lounsbury's criticism on the rhyme of vii. 5103 f ., as given in Pauli's edition, is quite sound, and Prof. Skeat's defence of it will not do. Gower never rhymes a past participle in -ed with a weak preterite, though he sometimes drops the ec of the preterite before a vowel. The rhyme was good enough for Chaucer, however, as Prof. Lounsbury's examples abundantly prove.

[^19]:    *The copics which have this conclusion have also the preface in which Richard is mentioned as the occasion of the euthar's tandertaking, but this preface is found also in combination with the other conclusion.

    ${ }^{2}$ It may be noted that the four second recension MSS. which contain the author's Latin note about his books (' Quia vnusquisque,' &c.), viz. BTAP2, agree in a form of it which is different both from that which is given by first recension copies and that which we find in $F$, and is clearly intermediate between the other two, the first form fully excusing Richard II for the troubles of his reign and the third entirely condemning him, while this makes no mention of his merits or demerits, but simply prays for the state of the kingdom. It is noticeable that the second recension form definitely substitutes Henry for Richard as the patron of the Confossio Amantis, though in one at least of the copies to which it is attached this substitution has not been made in the text of the poem.

[^21]:    ${ }^{1}$ For the explanation of the use of letters to designate MSS. the reader is referred to the list of MSS. given later. It should be noted that AJM and FWHs represent in each case a group of about seven MSS., and $\mathrm{H}_{1}$. . . B2 one of nearly twenty. We observe in the examples given that $B$ and $\Lambda$ are sometimes found either separately or together on the side of the $\mathrm{H}_{1} \ldots \mathrm{~B}_{2}$ group, and that the same is true occasionally of W , while on the other hand some MSS. of the $\mathrm{H}_{1} \ldots \mathrm{~B}_{2}$ group are apt to pass over to the other side in a certain part of the text and support what we call the revised reading.

[^22]:    ${ }^{1} \mathrm{~S}$ is defective in one of these places and Ad in another, but a reckoning of the lines contained in the missing leaves proves that the facts were as stated.
    ${ }^{2}$ They do not, however, contain the additions above mentioned, at Prol. 495, 579, i. 1403, 2067, &ec.

[^23]:    ${ }^{1}$ It is doubtful, however, whether the special connexion between $B$ and T extended over the whole book. It seems rather to begin about iii. 1500. The question about the relative position of these two MSS. would be easier of solution if it were not that $T$ is defective up to ii. 2687, that is as regards the part where the connexion of $B$ with the first recension is most apparent. The fact is that until about the middle of the third book B is found usually in accord with the ERCLBa group, and though it sometimes in these first books presents the characteristic second recension reading, as ii. 193, 365 ff, iii. 168, at other times it departs from it, as i . 1881, 2017 .

[^25]:    ${ }^{2}$ In the case of most of these passages the text proves them to be taken from Caxton's edition. Thus in Prol. 497 both editions omit 'to,' Prol. 583 both omit ' propre,' i. 2248 both have 'Vnder graue' for 'Vnder the grene,' in 2354 ' other' for 'thilke,' and in 2372 ' in me 'for 'I me.'

[^26]:    ${ }^{2}$ These lines have never been pr nted in any edaon before the present, though publashed separately by K, Meyerun has John Gower's Beasehumgen, & c. 1889, and by Prot. E asinu of the Umitersity of Pemnsylvania in his Reading's In Gower, 1895. Ihere ate a large number of sound emendations from the Hru, Museum MSS. suggested if thas latter book, but the author had no clear adea of twe princigles on which the text should be constructed.
